As I understand that suggestion, we would add to the chart a column for persons under 20(?) and indicate the presumptive award was the same as for a person making $30,000? Ordinarily in litigation, the parties would attempt to prove or disprove the likely career track of the individual. So, if you had someone in medical school, you may get a jury award based on a doctor's income.

>>> <Garry_Malphrus@opd.eop.gov> 12/17/01 11:59AM >>>

It seems that under the current system their presumed award would be non-economic damages, which may be fine for some. For example, I think it is fair to say that someone who was 70 and was working is not assumed to work longer absent a special showing. However, it does not seem fair that for someone who was not yet in the workforce, the chart does not assumed that they will make any income in the future, while the chart assumes that someone who just started in the workforce this year will make income over their entire career. For a presumptive award for these pre-workforce people, would you maybe assume that they would work for 30 years under a low salary?

How are we planning on handling the "special cases" of people who will not be able to find themselves on the charts that PW is preparing? What about the children who were on the planes, or the person who was 65 plus, or people under age 25? Our goal is to give people a very good idea of their award so they can decide to submit a claim. These people, however, may not have any idea about their award from the charts we're putting together and won't be in a good position to make a decision. Phil and John - what is your view of this issue?

One approach might be to have claims evaluators calculate presumptive awards on a case-by-case basis for these special cases, but not require them formally to submit their claims before opting into the program.

Another option would be to try to address these special cases in the regs - e.g., children who died will receive X amount, etc.

Any thoughts?

TITLE: NOMINATION OF WILLIAM P. JOHNSON, OF NEW MEXICO, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW MEXICO

SPEAKER: Mr. LEAHY; Mr. LEAHY. ; Mr. NICKLES; Mr. HATCH

TEXT: [*S13114]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report Calendar No. 599.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William P. Johnson, of New Mexico, to be United States District Judge for the District of New Mexico.

Mr. LEAHY . Mr. President, have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have not.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader, Mr. Daschle, and the distinguished deputy majority leader, Mr. Reid, who have worked so hard to get these nominations on the calendar so we can vote on them.

William Johnson is the third Federal judge confirmed from New Mexico in just the past few weeks. We expedited the consideration of Christina Armijo in October, who was confirmed last month; likewise, Harris Hartz, President Bush's nominee to the Tenth Circuit from New Mexico. I had a hearing at the end of October, and he was confirmed last week. All three of these nominees came to us with the strong support of both Senator Domenici and Senator Bingaman.

I mention this because it is so helpful to our committee when the White House takes time to consult with both Senators from the home State and get their support. We got this kind of consensus: When we confirm Mr. Johnson, we are going to fill another judicial emergency vacancy. After that, we are going to another nominee, Clay Land, who has been supported by Senators Cleland and Miller. I mention this because if we confirm both these next 2, we will have confirmed 27 Federal judges since July, when I took over the chairmanship, and 6 court of appeals judges.

To put that in perspective, since July, in those 5 months, we have confirmed as many as we confirmed all of the first year of the last President's administration_actually, a lot more judges in the courts of appeals.

Everybody has been working very hard. I also mention to my colleagues, this morning we were finally able to get a quorum in the Judiciary Committee. We had 10 nominations go through, 5 of them judges, 5 other nominations from the Department of Justice, all of which will go now on the calendar.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LEAHY. Of course.

Mr. REID. When did the Senator take over as chairman of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. LEAHY. I had a fully constituted committee I think it was in late July.

Mr. REID. It is my understanding that following September 11, the Senator and his staff literally worked night and day for how long before the [*S13115] committee came up with an antiterrorism bill?

Mr. LEAHY. We worked several weeks. It really was night and day. We had people going home at 2 o'clock in the morning and coming back at 5 o'clock in the morning to do that. I was getting e-mails at home at 3:30 in the morning from members of my staff and continued to do that until we got that bill out.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator also answer this question: It is my understanding the committee's work was hampered as a result of the anthrax problem that occurred in Senator Daschle's office and in the Senator's office; is that true?

Mr. LEAHY. The Senator from Nevada is right. We actually had to move much of the Judiciary staff out of the Dirksen Building. Some had been in the Hart Building in the proximity of the distinguished leader's office when the anthrax letter was opened. We were hampered by that because of medical treatment and still came to work.

In fact, we went so far, as the Senator probably knows, as to hold hearings during the recesses to keep this going.

Mr. REID. I was going to ask the Senator if he remembers another time when hearings were held regarding judges and other judicial matters during recess periods?

Mr. LEAHY. I have only been on the committee 25 years, but I cannot remember a time during those 25 years_in fact, the Senator from Nevada may be interested in this. Maybe he was involved in this. Does the Senator recall the day that part of the Capitol Building was evacuated because of the anthrax scare and all the other buildings were evacuated? The distinguished Senator from West Virginia made available his conference room in the Appropriations Committee. We held hearings in that conference room on more judges as the building was being evacuated and held a markup in executive session with 150 of us crowded into one room in the back, the President's Room, to get even more judges out which then the distinguished majority leader put on the calendar within, I think, 24 hours of that time and we were voting on them a couple days after that.

Mr. REID. The majority leader is in the Chamber, and I will not engage the Senator in any more dialog. Speaking for the people of Nevada and I think this country, when books are written over what transpired in this critical period of history, there is going to be a chapter on Pat Leahy and the tremendous job he did. It is precedent setting, and he has set a mark to which others will have to try to adhere.

Mr. LEAHY. That means a great deal to me, and I appreciate that. I appreciate the help of Senators on both sides of the aisle in helping to move this forward.

Mr. DASCHLE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEAHY. Yes.

Mr. DASCHLE. I also commend the distinguished chair of the Judiciary Committee along the lines the assistant Democratic leader has noted. It is important at a time such as this that we recall for the record just what has transpired. The distinguished chairperson has been chairperson now for about 5 months, almost 6 months, and in one-half year's time, he has compiled a record that may at the end of this period actually exceed the number of judiciary appointments confirmed during the Clinton administration in an entire 12-month period of time in 1993. That is quite a remarkable accomplishment to exceed perhaps the number of judicial nominations in 6 months over and above what was confirmed in 1993 under a Democratic administration with, I might add, a Democratic Senate.

Also, as the Senator from Nevada has noted, this has been an extraordinarily difficult time, filled with adversity. September 11, the anthrax attack, not only on the Senate and my office, but on the Senator's office itself_all of the disruption, the need for accelerated efforts on appropriations, and yet through all of that, with all of the work he had to do with counterterrorism, this Senator has very diligently, persistently, and with remarkable leadership brought us to this point.

I publicly commend him, thank him, and tell him how proud I am for his effort and the work he has done to get us to this point.

I yield the floor.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. LEAHY. Of course, I will.

Mr. NICKLES . Mr. President, to add to some of the statements that were made, I compliment my friend. He has assisted this Senator, and he has assisted other Senators, particularly on district court judges.

If my numbers are correct, I believe we are now at 27 judges confirmed, which equals the number of judges that were confirmed in President Clinton's first year. President Clinton, nominated 47 individuals for judicial positions, and the Senate confirmed 27 of those in his first year.

President Bush has made 64 judicial nominations at a time when there are a great number of vacancies. We have now confirmed 27, and I hope we will confirm some more.

I say to my friend and colleague from Vermont, we have done pretty well on district court judges. However, we are way behind on circuit judges. President Bush nominated eleven circuit court judges in May. Of those eleven, eight have not even had a hearing. One of these nominees is Miguel Estrada, who is a Honduras immigrant who graduated with honors from Columbia and graduated at the top of his law school class from Harvard.

Another is John Roberts, again a Harvard Law School grad. Among his many accomplishments, Mr. Roberts has argued 34 cases before the Supreme Court. I might also mention that Mr. Estrada has argued 14 cases before the Supreme Court. Both nominees are eminently qualified.

I wonder if my friend and colleague from Vermont can tell us when we will begin considering or having hearings on some of these exceptionally qualified individuals, both rated unanimously well qualified by the ABA and who have bipartisan support, who were nominated in May of this year?

Mr. LEAHY . Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma, my friend, has talked to me about this on several occasions. We are trying to get through these calendars as quickly as we can. As I say, I have only been here as chairman for 5 months. Actually, there were a number of nominees prior to my becoming chairman who never got a hearing at the beginning of this year.

We will have had far more courts of appeals judges than I think have ever been, or I can remember going through in a President's first year in office. We are going way beyond what the Senate usually does. It is certainly a much faster pace than the Senate has had in the last 4, 5, 6 years.

If we can slow down a little bit the things that are happening around here_anthrax, September 11, all the things we wish we did not have_if the chairman of the committee could deal with just a few less death threats_not from my friend from Oklahoma. The anthrax letter did not have an Oklahoma return address, nor would I expect it to.

Mr. NICKLES. I appreciate it.

Mr. LEAHY. We are moving through them. We have done Fifth Circuit Judge Clement, Second Circuit Judge Parker, Fourth Circuit Judge Gregory. I mentioned from New Mexico a circuit judge.

Mr. NICKLES. If the Senator will yield, we have confirmed six circuit court judges, but in this particular instance, the President has made many more circuit court nominees during his first year in office than any recent time in history. In fact, 28 have been nominated. I urge my colleague_and I will stop here_to have more hearings, especially for some of these individuals nominated in May. They are outstanding individuals.

I am more than certain that once they have their hearings, they will be confirmed by an overwhelming majority, both in the committee and on the floor of the Senate. I urge the chairman to have hearings on those individuals as soon as possible.

Mr. LEAHY. The Senator from Oklahoma asks an appropriate question. I can assure him we are trying to move through as many as we can. I hope, for example, the President will nominate more district judges, too. There are about 77 percent district court vacancies; about 77 percent do not even have a nominee. There is a real problem and we will work with the administration. [*S13116]

Some of the slowdowns have been taken care of, as the Senator from Oklahoma knows. We had a number of judges who were held up because the White House did not directly answer the question whether they had been arrested or convicted in the last 10 years. We thought that was at least a worthwhile thing to know for someone getting a lifetime appointment. I think the White House might have realized it made sense and allowed them to answer the question, and it broke a logjam. We had 10 nominations, 5 judges, that went through this morning. My intention is to keep moving as rapidly as we can.

I ask the distinguished acting Republican leader, we could have rollcalls on the next two judges, or if he has no objection, I would ask we do them by voice vote. If he would like rollcalls, that is his right.

Mr. NICKLES. Senators want to get to the Defense authorization bill. There is no reason we cannot. I am sure it is not necessary to have a recorded vote. A voice vote is more than acceptable for the other two judges. I thank my friend and colleague and look forward to having a hearing on Mr. Estrada. Forty-nine Senators have requested a hearing on Mr. Estrada and on Mr. Roberts and other nominees for the circuit court. As soon as we get hearings, it would be much appreciated.

Mr. HATCH . Mr. President, since the topic of the Judiciary Committee's record on judicial confirmations was raised, I would like to take just a minute to make an observation.

As everyone here knows, I do not like to engage in the typical statistics judo that seems to be intrinsic to this issue. But I do want everyone to understand that, despite the progress that was just mentioned, we really have a lot more work to do.

Look at the percentages: The Senate has exercised its advice and consent duty on only 21 percent of President Bush's circuit nominees this year. The other 79 percent of our work remains unfinished. And our overall record is not much better: the Senate has confirmed only 37.5 percent of all judicial nominations we received from President Bush. We will conclude our work by leaving nearly 100 vacancies in the judicial branch.

Now, these facts are not escaping wider attention outside the Judiciary Committee. Last week, Vice President Cheney sent a letter noting that "vacancies on the Federal bench are occurring at a faster pace than the confirmations of new judges, and barely one in four of President Bush's nominees has received a hearing and a vote." The Washington Post editorialized on November 30 that the committee should hold more judicial nominations hearings, concluding that, "failing to hold them in a timely fashion damages the judiciary, disrespects the President's power to name judges and is grossly unfair to often well-qualified nominees." And the Wall Street Journal observed on November 27 that there is a "pattern of judicial obstruction that has left 108 current vacancies on the Federal bench. . . . With only days to go before the Senate adjourns for the year, only 28 percent of George W. Bush's nominees have been confirmed."

Of course, the reason why people are taking notice is that the process of advice and consent on the President's judicial nominations is not a game.

This is not football or baseball, and the goal here is not a particular set of numbers. These are nominations for very important positions in the Federal Government, and it is the Senate's constitutional obligation to review them. Despite the work that we have done, there is simply no escaping the fact that we are about to stop work for the year with a judicial vacancy rate of 11.3 percent, which I believe is unacceptable by any measure. And, by the way, there is absolutely no point in accusing the administration of not sending more nominations to us, when we have made it clear that we will not devote any effort at all to reviewing 30 of the nominations the President did send.

All this being said, however, I have reason to look forward to hitting the ground running next year. The Judiciary Committee's obvious focus on confirming nearly the same number of judges as we did President Clinton's first year, reassures me. After all, during President Clinton's second year in office, the Senate confirmed 100 of his judicial nominees. I fully expect that we will do the same for President George W. Bush, in fact, I take it as a pledge that we will confirm 100 Bush nominees in 2002.

Mr. LEAHY. I did not request a rollcall vote. I ask for a voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. Stabenow). The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of William P. Johnson to be United States District Judge for the District of New Mexico?

The nomination was confirmed.

as I understand the current model, the consumption factors are fixed, which creates the results rebecca describes. The key issue for the regs is whether we describe this method or the cut off method (we can easily implement either one). The difficulty lies in creating a meaningful illustrative chart since everyone's family circumstances will differ. If we apply the cut off, the aggregate number will decrease. It seems to me that we would have to prepare a couple of charts showing children at different ages unless we can determine a standard percentage change for each child.

PW has flagged an issue that I wanted to bring to everyone's attention. The current approach computes consumption based on (among other things) a person's family size. But it does not make adjustments for expected changes in family size - i.e., the family getting smaller when children reach the age of majority.

The result is that a person's consumption is computed based on their family size as it existed on Sept 11 and that assumption is carried forward until the end of worklife. This assumption is generous to the claimants. PW tells me that it is also not consistent with the approach that is typically used in litigation. There, in calculating an individual award, the family in question is evaluated, and consumption estimates are made consistent with the ages of the dependent children. That is, if children are 10 months old, personal consumption is lower for a much longer time (and the award greater) than if the children are 17 years old.

PW points out that for marrieds with children, there will be an increase in personal consumption when the family shrinks (and resulting smaller award), but this effect is much greater for singles with dependents. We've seen from our charts that when a person is single w/ no dependents, personal consumption is much higher.

Question: Should we base presumptive awards on the assumption that family size remains constant forever, which is our current approach? Or should we make an adjustment based on the actual family and childrens' ages? If we take the latter approach, all other things being equal, those with young dependents will get greater awards than those with older ones. Also, if we decide take the latter approach, we will probably need to change the assumptions that we're working with in the charts that we're preparing, and adjust them to reflect some basic assumptions about the children (i.e., that all dependents are 9 years old (halfway to age of majority)).

FYI. This is consistent with our preference for a surcharge, if we have to swallow some type of payback mechanism.

We pulled this together in response to McCain staff inquiry. In the event the "assessments vs. surcharge" issue comes up, here's the accounting implications.

Re: Guaranty Fund and Other Assessments

As you are aware, the Senate is likely to vote on a federal terrorism bill this week. At the present time, there is no payback provision within the current drafts subject to Senate deliberation; however, recent discussion have included the possibility of an assessment mechanism to “pay back” the federal government for losses covered by any federal bill. This mechanism has raised questions about the impact of the assessment on the insurer’s financial condition.

The NAIC Accounting Practices and Procedures Manual is the authoritative source of statutory accounting principles and all states have adopted substantially similar provisions since 1998. Statement of Statutory Accounting Principle No. 35 – Guaranty Fund and Other Assessments establishes statutory accounting principles for guaranty fund and other (key word “other”) assessments. SSAP No. 35, paragraph 3, states that other assessments include, but are not limited to, workers’ compensation second injury funds and for funds that pay operating costs of an insurance department, a state guaranty fund and/or the workers’ compensation board. Paragraph 4 requires assessments to be recorded as a liability when both of the following conditions are met:

- a. Information available prior to the issuance of the statutory financial statements indicates that it is probable that an asset has been impaired or a liability has been incurred at the date of the statutory financial statements. It is implicit in this condition that it is probable that one or more future events will occur confirming the fact of the loss or incurrence of a liability; and
- b. The amount of loss can be reasonably estimated.

SSAP No. 35, paragraph 6, states that condition a. above is met when the insolvency occurs, regardless of whether the assessments are based on premiums written before or after the insolvency. For purposes of applying this guidance, the insolvency shall be considered to have occurred when a reporting entity meets a state’s statutory definition of an insolvent reporting entity.

Assuming that the federal assessment would be made following the occurrence of the covered event and would be based upon premium written in periods preceding the covered event, NAIC staff believe that the two conditions described above will certainly have been met and, therefore, the reporting entity will be required to record a liability equal to its estimate of its share of the ultimate assessment liability. Management's best estimate of the liability shall be recorded.

The good news is that this liability may be offset by estimable recoveries from premium tax credits and premium surcharges. SSAP No. 35, paragraph 9, states that because assessment are generally paid before premium tax credits are realized or policy surcharges are collected, an asset may result, which represents a receivable for premium tax credits that will be taken and policy surcharges which will be collected in the future. These amounts, to the extent it is probable they will be realized, meet the statutory definition of an admitted asset, and are required to be established and reported independent from the liability (not reported net). Assuming that the federal bill will allow the industry to offset its federal assessments with policy surcharges, it appears that reporting entities will be allowed to offset its "ultimate assessment liability" with its expected recoveries from such policy surcharges. While SSAP No. 35 requires the resulting asset and liability to be reported gross, not net, paragraph 7 allows the assessment to be offset by expected recoveries when it is reported in the income statement as taxes, licenses and fees. Additionally, SSAP No. 35, paragraph 11, requires certain disclosures for any assessments that have a material financial effect on the statutory financial statements.

On the GAAP side, AICPA Statement of Position 97-3, Accounting by Insurance and Other Enterprises for Insurance-Related Assessments, the guidance is fairly consistent in terms of the criteria for recording and estimating the assessment liability and related premium tax and policy surcharge offsets. The primary difference is that SSAP No. 35 is more conservative in nature, as it requires a company to record assessment liabilities based on the two conditions described in paragraph 4. SOP 97-3 on the other hand, adds a third criteria, which includes the definition of the "obligating event." SOP 97-3 does not require assessment liabilities to be recorded until the obligating event, the event obligating the entity to pay the assessment (e.g., the writing of premium), has occurred. In essence, if the assessment is based on future premium, the GAAP entity will not record the liability until the premium is written in future years, while the SAP entity will record its ultimate assessment liability, regardless of when it writes the premium upon which the assessment is based (as described in paragraph 6).

In conclusion, NAIC staff believes that, should the Senate propose an assessment mechanism, which includes a mandated pass-through policy surcharge, there would be no significant impact on the net equity of the insurance industry. Please let me know if you have any questions or concerns about the information we have provided herein. You can reach me at (816) 783-8006 or Dave Christensen, Statutory Accounting Principles Manager, at (816) 783-8125.

We didn't seem to resolve anything on the Special Master's discretion, so for now the draft is the same (can deviate from presumed awards based upon exceptional circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumed awards). Re the additional language re individual circumstances, we have something close to that in the preamble, which we will circulate later today. I agree w/ the point and I also want to tie it to the minimum payment, so we note the $250,000 minimum when we discuss the 98% upper limit (i.e. we want to make sure everyone has at least a minimum level of recovery but no one gets an excessive recovery).

I missed the beginning of this because of conflict w/ another call.
where are we on master's discretion?
in addition, why not add something like this: "The statute specifies that individual circumstances beyond economic and non-economic damages must be taken into account. One relevant individual circumstance is the need and wealth of the claimant. Awards in excess of $3 million, tax-free, rarely will be appropriate in light of an individual's needs and wealth absent some extraordinary and compelling circumstance."

FYI. This is consistent with our preference for a surcharge, if we have to swallow some type of payback mechanism.

It seems that under the current system their presumed award would be non-economic damages, which may be fine for some. For example, I think it is fair to say that someone who was 70 and was working is not assumed to work longer absent a special showing. However, it does not seem fair that for someone who was not yet in the workforce, the chart does not assumed that they will make any income in the future, while the chart assumes that someone who just started in the workforce this year will make income over their entire career. For a presumptive award for these pre-workforce people, would you maybe assume that they would work for 30 years under a low salary?

Subject: Victims Comp - Special Cases

How are we planning on handling the "special cases" of people who will not be able to find themselves on the charts that PW is preparing? What about the children who were on the planes, or the person who was 65 plus, or people under age 25? Our goal is to give people a very good idea of their award so they can decide to submit a claim. These people, however, may not have any idea about their award from the charts we're putting together and won't be in a good position to make a decision. Phil and John - what is your view of this issue?

One approach might be to have claims evaluators calculate presumptive awards on a case-by-case basis for these special cases, but not require them formally to submit their claims before opting into the program.

Another option would be to try to address these special cases in the regs - e.g., children who died will receive X amount, etc.

Any thoughts?

I was just reminding everyone of (1) the requirement to submit leave paperwork if you are taking more days off than the official holiday of Dec. 24 and 25, and (2) directing you to the person to talk to if you have questions about your leave balance (Ms. Lewis - contact info listed below).

Leave forms can be found at <http://www.eop.gov/OA/Forms/OPM71.pdf>. These forms should be submitted to Human Resources - not me. Contact: Harriet Lewis at 395-1299, office is NEOB 4013.

Thanks!

As I understand that suggestion, we would add to the chart a column for persons under 20(?) and indicate the presumptive award was the same as for a person making $30,000? Ordinarily in litigation, the parties would attempt to prove or disprove the likely career track of the individual. So, if you had someone in medical school, you may get a jury award based on a doctor's income.

>>> <Garry_Malphrus@opd.eop.gov> 12/17/01 11:59AM >>>

It seems that under the current system their presumed award would be non-economic damages, which may be fine for some. For example, I think it is fair to say that someone who was 70 and was working is not assumed to work longer absent a special showing. However, it does not seem fair that for someone who was not yet in the workforce, the chart does not assumed that they will make any income in the future, while the chart assumes that someone who just started in the workforce this year will make income over their entire career. For a presumptive award for these pre-workforce people, would you maybe assume that they would work for 30 years under a low salary?

Subject: Victims Comp - Special Cases

How are we planning on handling the "special cases" of people who will not be able to find themselves on the charts that PW is preparing? What about the children who were on the planes, or the person who was 65 plus, or people under age 25? Our goal is to give people a very good idea of their award so they can decide to submit a claim. These people, however, may not have any idea about their award from the charts we're putting together and won't be in a good position to make a decision. Phil and John - what is your view of this issue?

One approach might be to have claims evaluators calculate presumptive awards on a case-by-case basis for these special cases, but not require them formally to submit their claims before opting into the program.

Another option would be to try to address these special cases in the regs - e.g., children who died will receive X amount, etc.

Any thoughts?

as I understand the current model, the consumption factors are fixed, which creates the results rebecca describes. The key issue for the regs is whether we describe this method or the cut off method (we can easily implement either one). The difficulty lies in creating a meaningful illustrative chart since everyone's family circumstances will differ. If we apply the cut off, the aggregate number will decrease. It seems to me that we would have to prepare a couple of charts showing children at different ages unless we can determine a standard percentage change for each child.

PW has flagged an issue that I wanted to bring to everyone's attention. The current approach computes consumption based on (among other things) a person's family size. But it does not make adjustments for expected changes in family size - i.e., the family getting smaller when children reach the age of majority.

The result is that a person's consumption is computed based on their family size as it existed on Sept 11 and that assumption is carried forward until the end of worklife. This assumption is generous to the claimants. PW tells me that it is also not consistent with the approach that is typically used in litigation. There, in calculating an individual award, the family in question is evaluated, and consumption estimates are made consistent with the ages of the dependent children. That is, if children are 10 months old, personal consumption is lower for a much longer time (and the award greater) than if the children are 17 years old.

PW points out that for marrieds with children, there will be an increase in personal consumption when the family shrinks (and resulting smaller award), but this effect is much greater for singles with dependents. We've seen from our charts that when a person is single w/ no dependents, personal consumption is much higher.

Question: Should we base presumptive awards on the assumption that family size remains constant forever, which is our current approach? Or should we make an adjustment based on the actual family and childrens' ages? If we take the latter approach, all other things being equal, those with young dependents will get greater awards than those with older ones. Also, if we decide take the latter approach, we will probably need to change the assumptions that we're working with in the charts that we're preparing, and adjust them to reflect some basic assumptions about the children (i.e., that all dependents are 9 years old (halfway to age of majority)).

Each staff member is responsible for submitting their own leave forms.

You notifying me, Allison or Lori that you are going to be out out of the office simply allows us to know that I need to track you down elsewhere if you are needed.

Sending us an email that you are out of the office does not satisfy the fun paperwork that we are all supposed to fill out when we take sick leave, annual leave, etc.

I just received a copy of an opinion from the Congressional Research Service, dated December 14, 2001, in which the conclusion sentence (stated at the beginning) is as follows:

"Our review of the legislative history of the 1983 and 1994 enactments and pertinent legal precedent indicates that a reviewing court is likely to hold that the 1994 legislation did not repeal the staggered term requirement and that Mr. Kirsanow is entitled to the vacant position on the Commission."

The opinion is written by Morton Rosenberg of the American Law Division as CRS, and is addressed to the House Subcommittee on the Constitution (Attn: Keith Ausbrook). The addressee is Republican, and I don't know anything about the politics of the author, but CRS is independent and not exactly known as a right-wing bastion.

As discussed at today's meeting, here is a one page set of talking points on judicial nominations. On the second page is the chart that compares the first years of the past three Presidents. This is a draft and please send me your input so that we can finalize these by tomorrow. I can recirculate once changes are made. Thanks.

Neal

 It should be noted these documents are intended for the recess and accordingly assume there will be five more confirmations and three more nominations before the Senate recesses. The numbers are therefore subject to slightly change.

I like this version much better. I would suggest changing the word "crucial" to "needed" and adding one or two sentences on the legal procedures. I believe that Kristen Silverberg is working on this. I would urge everyone to send their changes in to Ed by noon, and then have Ed send to OMB for immediate circulation in their SAP process (with a short turnaround). We should have a final version ready by late this afternoon.

SECOND DRAFT

Senate SAP on Terrorism Risk Insurance

The Administration strongly supports the creation of a terrorism risk insurance program that will provide much needed stability to our economy. The backstop insurance program established in the Senate-amended version of H.R. 3210 is a well-crafted and effective mechanism for ensuring the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts. The program provides insurance companies with transparency in assessing their potential loss exposure while appropriately limiting that exposure and encouraging the private sector to build new capacity. It will aid the economy by dampening any increases in insurance costs or curtailment of insurance coverage while limiting federal intrusion into private activity.

The Administration urges Senate passage of the Senate-amended version of H.R. 3210 as a crucial step towards enactment of a terrorism risk insurance program. However, the Administration cannot support final enactment of the bill unless stronger procedures for terrorist-related litigation management are added in conference.

Consistent with President Bush,s recent executive order on Presidential records, the National Archives and Records Administration today has released thousands of pages of Reagan Presidential documents. This is only the first of what will be many routine releases of Presidential records, including a great many otherwise privileged records.

Today,s actions will undoubtedly come as a shock to those historians, archivists, and politicians who launched uninformed and unfair attacks on President Bush,s recent order. The release of these demonstrates that the order implementing the Presidential Records Act can and will work to help facilitate appropriate and expeditious public release of Presidential records.

President Bush,s executive order establishes orderly procedures and time periods for former Presidents to review and, if they so choose, assert constitutional privileges over their sensitive Presidential records. Some have suggested that President Bush,s order is inconsistent with the Presidential Records Act, claiming that the Act requires release of Presidential records -- including privileged records -- after expiration of the statute,s 12-year period of presumed non-disclosure. That is simply wrong. The Presidential Records Act expressly provides that former Presidents retain the right to assert constitutional privileges over their Presidential records, including after the statutory 12-year period has elapsed.

Indeed, if the Act did not provide such a right, the statute would almost certainly be unconstitutional. In 1977, in the landmark Nixon v. GSA case authored by Justice Brennan, the Supreme Court definitively held that the Constitution authorizes former Presidents to assert privileges over their records. Unlike the order,s critics, President Bush was not free to ignore the law established by Congress and the Supreme Court simply to reach a policy result that serves the interests of professional historians and others.

A few critics have also argued that the order itself precludes the release of Presidential records. Anyone who had taken the trouble to read the order would know better. The order sets up an orderly procedure for the expeditious review and release of records that raise privilege questions. Indeed, President Bush,s order appropriately refrains from indicating whether and under what circumstances a former President should assert privileges, leaving that decision to the former President and his representatives.

Of course, the fact that the order establishes procedures for former Presidents to protect their constitutionally guaranteed privileges does not mean that former Presidents must or should or will assert such privileges. Indeed, history proves that the reverse is true. Before the Presidential Records Act took effect in 1981, former Presidents were assured to have personal ownership of their records to hold, release, or destroy as they saw fit. Although they were under no legal obligation to even disclose any records, most former Presidents released the vast majority of their records. Those who visit the Kennedy Library or the Ford Library or the Carter Library, for example, know the rich and valuable array of historical materials that are available.

President Bush anticipates that this tradition will continue. At a minimum, there is no fair or logical basis for presuming that former Presidents subject to the Presidential Records Act will exercise their constitutional and statutory authority to seek withholding of privileged records more aggressively than earlier Presidents -- from President Washington to President Carter -- exercised their plenary and far broader authority to withhold all records.

For that reason, we are confident that, over time, the vast majority of Presidential records -- including otherwise privileged records -- will be made available to the public. Today's release of thousands of pages of privileged records supports that prediction.

Relatedly, although one strains to find this point mentioned in public commentary, the single most important aspect of President Bush's executive order -- and its single biggest innovation -- is that the current President will defer to absent compelling circumstances to the decision of the former President to authorize release of records. This provision of the order largely removes the current President as a potential impediment to release of the former President's records.

This was a very significant policy decision. When combined with the historical fact that former Presidents over time have authorized release of the vast majority of records (and as further exemplified by today's action), it is clear that President Bush's order was designed to -- and will -- help facilitate the expeditious release of Presidential records. We therefore find it unfortunate that the President's order has been repeatedly characterized in precisely the opposite fashion.

Some have asked what happens if a former President asserts a privilege over a sensitive record, and the requester wants to challenge the privilege claim. In that circumstance, the requester can file suit, just as routinely occurs when Executive Branch records are withheld under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). Some have argued that the burden should instead be on the former President asserting privilege to file suit against the current President and Archivist to block release. That suggestion is neither constitutionally appropriate nor sound policy, in our judgment. We believe it far more appropriate and sensible for the requester who disagrees with the former President's privilege assertion to proceed to court -- just as the requester would do in ordinary FOIA litigation -- not to require the former President take the extraordinary and jarring public step of suing the current President.

For months, there have been skeptics who have bitterly -- and wrongly -- questioned President Bush's motives in establishing sensible procedures for the review of Presidential records. The President's order, however, is perfectly consistent with both statutory law, and Supreme Court determinations. Moreover, today's action authorizing the release of thousands of pages of privileged records from President Reagan's library shows that the President's executive order can and will work as intended: to facilitate appropriate and expeditious public release of Presidential records consistent with the Presidential Records Act

Senate SAP on Terrorism Risk Insurance

The Administration strongly supports the creation of a terrorism risk insurance program that will provide much needed stability to our economy. The backstop insurance program established in the Senate-amended version of H.R. 3210 is a well-crafted and effective mechanism for ensuring the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts. The program provides insurance companies with transparency in assessing their potential loss exposure while appropriately limiting that exposure and encouraging the private sector to build new capacity. It will aid the economy by dampening any increases in insurance costs or curtailment of insurance coverage while limiting federal intrusion into private activity.

The Administration urges Senate passage of the Senate-amended version of H.R. 3210 as a crucial step towards enactment of a terrorism risk insurance program. However, the Administration cannot support final enactment of the bill unless stronger procedures for terrorist-related litigation management are added in conference.

Brett, in addition to the substantive comments Ed and I have given you by phone, here are a few nits:

Add full cite to Nixon v. GSA in 3rd para.

In para. 7, add "whether" after "former President" in 3rd line, and change
"Presidentiecards" to "Presidential records" in 3rd-to-last line.

In para. 9 ("First"), dehyphenate "long-standing"

In para. 12 ("There also"), add "to" before "take" in line 10.

Judge Gonzales and I met with Chairman Horn last Friday. It was a very pleasant meeting. The Judge intends to send the following letter to him as follow-up, which the Chairman may then use with members of his subcommittee and with the full committee. I need you all to review the draft to ensure that nothing said is inconsistent with our litigation position/interests. Any additional substantive edits are also welcome. As to the broader question whether a letter is necessary and appropriate, I think that decision has been made. I need comments by 1:00 Tuesday by e-mail or FAX. My FAX is 456-5104.
Thanks very much.

Press Statement Victims Compensation Fund

Today, 90 days after Congress enacted the September 11 Victims Compensation Fund of 2001 into law, the U.S. Department of Justice and Special Master, Kenneth R. Feinberg, announced regulations that will guide the Special Master in providing financial relief to the victims of the September 11 terrorist attacks. The Fund is an unprecedented expression of compassion on the part of the American people to victims and their families devastated by the horror and tragedy of September 11. It both symbolizes and makes tangible the compassion of the American people for their victimized countrymen and women.

The regulations are designed to bring some measure of financial relief to those most devastated by the events of September 11. They reflect two objectives: (1) to provide fair, predictable and consistent compensation to the victims of September 11 and their families; and (2) to do so in an expedited, efficient manner without unnecessary bureaucracy and undue demands on the victims. The regulations are a fast-track administrative alternative to the emotional turmoil, procedural delay, uncertainty and expense of other legal remedies. Quick and substantial payments to eligible claimants are the hallmarks of this program.

Although each award will ultimately depend upon a victim's individual circumstances, the (presumptive?) payment before offset for collateral source payments to a family of four where the victim's pre-September 11 annual income was (suggest including $25,000 example here, and first) $75,000 will be $XXX. The needy families that the victims left behind will be eligible to receive immediate advance benefits of $50,000, and those who suffered serious injuries can receive advance benefits of $25,000.

The framework we have developed gives the Special Master a methodology for quickly assessing claimants' losses based on uniform economic assumptions and information that will be readily available to the claimants. Claimants will be required to provide the minimum documentation necessary to substantiate their claim, although they will have the option of providing the Special Master with any supplemental information they believe is important. This approach will enable the each claimant's unique circumstances to be taken into account within the 120-day time limit set by Congress for the Special Master's award determination.

The September 11 Victims Compensation Fund of 2001 is a solemn commitment by the American people to show solidarity with, and generosity for, those injured by the unconscionable September 11 attack on our country. Neither this Fund nor any other monetary compensation can possibly provide a full measure of relief to those who have suffered as a result of September 11. But the Fund will provide swift and sure compensation, and some measure of comfort, to those whose lives have been torn asunder by the events of September 11.

Marshall,

I have coordinated CEA comments with Randy Kroszner and Doug Holtz-Eakin.

CEA concurs with the SAP on the Senate version of HR 3210, subject to one requested change. Currently the SAP reads

"For many companies facing rising insurance premiums, the increased costs result almost entirely from the risk of litigation."

We doubt the factual accuracy of this statement, and recommend that "almost entirely" be replaced with "in part". The revised sentence would be as follows.

"For many companies facing rising insurance premiums, the increased costs result in part from the risk of litigation."

Please feel free to call me (55086) with any questions.

Thanks,
Jeff Brown

SUMMARY:

... The United States Supreme Court confronts an example this spring:

"quid

pro quo sexual harassment," which it is asked to define in Burlington Industries, Inc. v. Ellerth. ... Catharine MacKinnon is credited with introducing quid pro quo to the analysis of sex discrimination in her influential 1979 book, Sexual Harassment of Working Women. ... In other words, sexual motivation once was used as a defense; it was defendants who distinguished what I will call quid pro quo "retaliation" cases from other adverse-job-action cases, characterized them as sexual harassment, and said that as such they were not actionable. ... Of course, quid pro quo retaliation is the other side of the coin from a scenario that plainly is sexual harassment

and that is not actionable as adverse job action - the circumstance where the woman submits to the quid pro quo threat and her boss sexually abuses her. ...

as the quid pro quo retaliation case is a strong adverse-job-action case, so

the

quid pro quo submission case often will be stronger than the environmental harassment claim that lacks an express threat of retaliation. ...

Title VII issues a simple command - don't treat employees differently

for you right now, Kim, unless you tell me what you're wearing," a statement that Judge Flaum found to be a quid pro quo proposition in his Jansen opinion?
<=48> n47 More to the point, if the retaliation case is treated as adverse job action, and the submission case is handled as environmental discrimination, it is difficult to see how the quid pro quo threat alone is substantial enough, or different enough, to constitute a separate "form" or "category" of discrimination. And no one has contended it is. MacKinnon's "fourth logical possibility" is not a reason to retain the category of quid pro quo discrimination. <=49> n48

This leaves one argument for retaining quid pro quo as a discrete category of harassment: the standard of employer liability. Liability for adverse job action is strict. The consensus is that liability for environmental harassment is not (although the exact standard is another issue that has divided the courts
and that the Supreme Court takes up this Term in Faragher v. City of Boca Raton <=50> n49). Liability for quid pro quo in retaliation and [*321] submission cases, however, has widely though not uniformly been thought to be strict. (The Court declined to grant certiorari on this issue in the Burlington Industries case.) Thus, Lindemann and Grossman instructs that "in certain cases the line between [quid pro quo and environmental harassment] may be fuzzy" but that "it is crucial to determine which theory (or theories) apply...[because] in quid pro quo cases employer liability is automatic...[whereas] employer liability in hostile environment cases depends on agency principles."

The rule of strict liability in quid pro quo submission cases illustrates
to a degree the doctrinal confusion caused by the term's ambiguity. Liability is strict in adverse-job-action cases, and should be no less strict when the adverse job action is retaliation for refusing sexual advances. This was the reasoning of Henson, which began its discussion of employer liability by stating that an employer is strictly liable in the "typical" adverse-job-action case:

Sexual harassment resulting in a tangible job detriment is a form of sex discrimination every bit as deleterious...as other unlawful employment practices. We hold that an employer is strictly liable for the actions of its supervisors that amount to sexual discrimination or sexual harassment resulting in tangible job detriment.... <=52> n51

The Second Circuit's Karibian decision is a striking illustration of adopting strict liability for submission cases because that is the quid pro quo rule, without considering that the "quid pro quo rule" results from the adverse-job-action element of the retaliation case, which the submission case lacks. In Karibian the Second Circuit recognized the quid pro quo submission case for the first time, and had to distinguish Kotcher v. Rosa & Sullivan Appliance Center, Inc. <=53> n52 and Carrero v. New York City Housing Authority, <=54> n53 where it had stated that quid pro quo required adverse job action. Kotcher was a hostile work environment case, Karibian explained; its statement on quid pro quo was dictum. <=55> n54 As for Carrero, it was a retaliation case; its statement was merely "descriptive of the facts [*322] before the Court." <=56> n55 One page earlier, however, Karibian had relied on exactly two cases for the proposition that quid pro quo liability is strict: Kotcher and Carrero. The court even quoted a sentence from Kotcher that explicitly tied the rule of strict liability in quid pro quo to the presence of adverse job action: ""The supervisor is deemed to act on behalf of the employer when making decisions that affect the economic status of the employee."" <=57> n56

But strict liability in quid pro quo submission cases is not entirely an accident. Henson noted that co-workers as well as supervisors can make a work environment hostile. At least in co-worker environmental harassment cases, therefore, it must be asked whether the employer should be responsible. Quid pro quo harassment, by contrast, is uniquely a supervisor's act. <=58> n57 Today, the leading reason given for strict liability is that quid pro quo necessarily entails authority conferred by the employer. <=59> n58 The supervisor is acting with "actual" or "apparent" authority, it is said, and the employer therefore is bound. <=60> n59

The proper standard of employer liability for harassment is beyond the scope of this Article. My concern is not what standard should apply, but whether different standards should apply in quid pro quo and environmental cases, for only in that event is there reason to retain quid pro quo as a discrete category of discrimination. My view is that strict liability is inappropriate for quid pro quo submission cases because the quid pro quo harasser seldom acts within his actual or apparent authority. He has actual and not merely apparent authority to terminate. But that is not what he is doing. He is demanding sexual favors. And he has no authority to do that, as should be "apparent" to [*323] co-workers familiar with company policy and the discrimination laws. Apparent authority is boundless if it includes whatever agents unlawfully use actual authority to extort.

What is important for purposes of this Article, however, is that it is a fiction that the quid pro quo harasser acts with more authority - actual or apparent - than the boss who takes without asking in the environmental discrimination case. That is, the company is no more complicit in quid pro quo harassment than in environmental harassment; in both instances the supervisor uses power and opportunity supplied by the company for a purpose that, in most workplaces, company policy expressly prohibits. One supervisor orders his assistant to accompany him on a business trip and gropes her on the plane, at dinner, and in the hotel. A second supervisor does the same and tells her that's what he did with her predecessors. A third supervisor adds that if she doesn't submit she's fired. The first scenario is environmental harassment only, not quid pro quo. The third is both. The second is ambiguous. I believe the employer should not be liable in any of these scenarios unless it endorsed the conduct. Others will argue that the employer should be liable without more in each. Either answer has more to recommend it than yoking to the tired formalism of quid pro quo yet another legal fiction: that the supervisor who goes the extra measure and violates the company non-discrimination policy in word as well as deed, thereupon acts with the authority of, and on behalf of, the company.

In the words of Judge Diane Wood of the Seventh Circuit:

When [a] supervisor bombards an unwilling subordinate with unwanted sexual images, touching, vulgar words, or denigrating comments, only the most committed formalist would feel confident in saying when those actions cross the imaginary line from "hostile environment" harassment to "quid pro quo" harassment. By the same token, when the supervisor makes constant demands for sex in exchange for job benefits (maybe in jest, maybe not), the victim surely suffers from a "hostile environment" at the same time that she endures the "quid pro quo" harassment. <=61> n60

"In the real world," Judge Wood wrote, "sexual harassment does not sort itself into tidy categories"; those who would retain [*324] separate standards of liability for quid pro quo and environmental harassment have failed to "question[] the legal basis of the distinction between "'quid pro quo' and 'hostile environment' claims," a distinction "now some eighteen years old...." <=62> n61

This critique of the distinction between quid pro quo and environmental harassment is correct, <=63> n62 with this amendment: not even in the theoretical world inhabited by Title VII terms, tests, and categories is quid pro quo "tidy." Instead, quid pro quo is redundant and ambiguous in theory, and cumbersome and confusing in practice. It should be abandoned.

VI.

Conclusion

Quid pro quo owes its longevity to the triumph of form over substance in the application of discrimination law. Substantively quid pro quo was redundant

existing law literally from the day it was recognized in Henson. In obedience to McDonnell Douglas, however, it was reduced to a five-part test that not only endured but, after Karibian, mutated to another multi-part test. That second test is fundamentally different from the first but is supposed to be the same;
it is redundant of an entirely different doctrine; and, in slavish devotion to a principle irrelevant to the occurrence of discrimination, it has been stated
embodying the startling concept that the taint of discrimination can be removed if, after the woman submits, she is denied the job she was promised.
Quite a track record for a doctrine that owed its adoption to the failed argument that sexually-motivated discrimination is not sex discrimination,
and perhaps also to the mistaken conjecture that sexual advances not made "terms" of employment might be outside of Title VII.

[*325] Quid pro quo should be excised, with Occam's razor. And the manner in which it gained a life of its own stands warning against mechanical reliance on complex tests to determine whether someone was treated differently because of sex.

Court that should make the 1997 Term the defining year in the law of sexual harassment. In Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, No. 97-282, the Court addresses the standard of employer liability for "environmental" sexual harassment, an issue that is regarded as closely tied to quid pro quo for reasons explained
in Part V, infra. Earlier this Term, in <=67> Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore

be discrimination "because of" sex under Title VII even when the harasser and victim are the same sex.

n14. I exclude from this discussion another possibility: that the woman was not qualified and the quid pro quo proposition gave her a chance at employment she otherwise would not have had. MacKinnon described such offers as widely rumored and rarely made, see MacKinnon, supra note 9, at 36-38, but she does not address whether Title VII is violated when, in this manner, a woman is effectively offered and denied a job because of sex. Under the Henson test the case would fail because the woman could not prove an element of her prima facie case - that she was "otherwise qualified." <=76> Henson, 682 F.2d at 909. The same result could be reached by positing that, when the qualified and unqualified woman refuse the proposition, both are insisting that they be treated as a man would be: the unqualified woman is so treated (the unqualified man would not get the job either) and the qualified woman is not. Under current law, however, the unqualified woman might have a partial remedy without a special quid pro quo category of discrimination. See <=77> 42 U.S.C. 2000e-2(m), 2000e-5(g) (2) (B) (1994).

n20. <=85> Id. at 660-61. See generally MacKinnon, supra note 9, at 83-90 (discussing these and other cases).

n21. It reflects how far the law of sexual harassment has come that today some courts would maintain that sexual motive is necessary to certain Title VII claims. See <=86> Wrightson v. Pizza Hut of America, Inc., 99 F.3d 138, 143 (4th Cir. 1996) (harassment by person of the same sex is not actionable under Title VII unless the aggressor is a homosexual acting out of prurient interest). The Supreme Court rejected this approach in <=87> Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Services, Inc., 118 S. Ct. 998, 1002 (1998).

n22. For a decision pre-dating MacKinnon's book that holds for the plaintiff on the ground that sexually-motivated termination is discrimination "because of" sex, see <=88> Barnes v. Costle, 561 F.2d 983 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

A slightly different historical account is offered in Barbara Lindemann & David D. Kadue, Sexual Harassment in Employment Law 145-46 (1992), but the same critique applies. The authors explain that courts "initially were reluctant" to find quid pro quo retaliation actionable because "the proximate cause of the adverse employment action was the female complainant's activity (her rejection of sexual advances) rather than her gender." Id. at 145. However, "courts now uniformly find quid pro quo harassment unlawful...simply by reasoning that when an employer conditions an individual's employment opportunities upon services as a sexual partner, it is discriminating on the basis of gender." Id. at 146. Precisely. And because the woman lost employment "on the basis of gender," quid pro quo retaliation cases should be treated with adverse-job-action cases generally.

n23. MacKinnon and her allies might have wanted retaliation cases to be perceived as harassment for another reason: The courts were bound to find illegal under Title VII to terminate a woman for refusing sexual favors (as illustrated by the reversal on appeal of cases discussed in text accompanying notes 15-18, supra). Portraying that form of discrimination as the "other side of the coin" from the submission case could be expected to facilitate recognition of the submission case too. From there it was but a short step to recognizing that taking sex without asking in the environmental harassment case could also be illegal.

But this is not how the law developed: quid pro quo did not leverage the actionability of environmental harassment. Rather, the two "forms" were recognized virtually simultaneously. Indeed, Henson is both the first sex discrimination case to use the term quid pro quo and a seminal "environmental" harassment case, quoted at length in the Supreme Court decision that recognized environmental harassment as actionable. See <=89> Meritor Sav. Bank, FSB
v.
Vinson, 477 U.S. 57, 66-67 (1986). And, Henson discussed and recognized the actionability of environmental harassment before taking up quid pro quo.
See
<=90> Henson v. City of Dundee, 682 F.2d 897, 901-06 (11th Cir. 1982).
More to the point, and as discussed immediately below, submission cases only recently have proceeded under the name quid pro quo.

n24. <=91> Henson, 682 F.2d at 909 (emphases added).

n25. <=92> Id. at 911 n.22 (emphasis added). The redundancy of the test is obvious when that test is compared to McDonnell Douglas's. The woman could state a prima facie case under McDonnell Douglas with steps 1, 3, 4, and 5 of Henson: she was a (1) woman who was (3) qualified but (4) rejected, and (5) the position was still held out. See <=93> McDonnell Douglas Corp. v.
Green,
411 U.S. 792, 802-04 & n.13 (1973). Why - because she was also subjected to the indignity of sexual advances - should she have to prove those advances as an element to her claim? The liberal conspiracy theorist will be forgiven spying in this rule the machinations of the white male hegemony. As an employment lawyer - and not a liberal conspiracy theorist - I see different forces: the history discussed above, and the weakness of courts and practitioners for encumbering
Title VII with ponderous, unwieldy, and occasionally unjust multi-factored tests.

N36. The retaliation case includes a threat or promise to the same

n38. See, e.g., <=107> Meritor, 477 U.S. 57 (recognizing environmental harassment when plaintiff has unwanted sex with a supervisor to remain employed); see also Lindemann & Kadue, supra note 22, at 158, which identifies the following differences between quid pro quo and environmental harassment:

(1) environmental harassment need not be the act of a supervisor; (2) it is not limited to sexual advances; and (3) it does not require proof of economic injury. In other words, the plaintiff who can prove quid pro quo submission can prove environmental harassment - with less. A fourth and final difference the treatise identifies is that liability generally is automatic in quid pro quo cases. Id. This is discussed in Part V, infra.

Environmental discrimination requires a certain quantum of harassing conduct

- it must be "severe" or "pervasive." See <=108> Harris, 510 U.S. at 21. No such requirement has been stated in cases allowing quid pro quo submission claims. Quid pro quo submission cases can be expected to meet that requirement virtually by definition, however. Compare <=109> Karibian v. Columbia University, 14 F.3d 773, 776 (2d Cir. 1994) (concerning a "violent sexual relationship" over several years), and <=110> Nichols v. Frank, 42 F.3d 503, 506 (9th Cir. 1994) (concerning a plaintiff who "repeatedly but unwillingly performed oral sex"), with Lindemann & Grossman, supra note 4, at 795 ("[A] physical incident may constitute unlawful [environmental] harassment, on the basis of its severity, even if it occurs only once."), and <=111> Tomka v. Seiler Corp., 66 F.3d 1295, 1305 (2d Cir. 1995) ("Even a single incident of sexual assault sufficiently alters the conditions of the victim's employment and clearly creates an abusive work environment for purposes of Title VII liability."), and <=112> King v. Board of Regents, 898 F.2d 533, 537 (7th Cir. 1990) ("[A] single act [of harassment] can be enough."). In a quid pro quo submission case, moreover, the single "physical incident" is preceded by at least one sexually-offensive threat or solicitation.

The EEOC definition of sexual harassment contains the same notion: sexual harassment occurs, inter alia, when "submission to or rejection of [unwelcome sexual advances] by an individual is used as the basis for employment decisions affecting such individual." 29C.F.R.1604.11(a)(2)(1997) ("Sexual harassment"). The EEOC definition captures the quid without quo scenario elsewhere, however, allowing that harassment also occurs when "submission to [unwelcome sexual advances] is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment." Id. at 1604.11(a)(1). Of course, this broader language also includes the environmental harassment case where sexual conduct effectively is made a "condition" of employment, demonstrating again that quid pro quo does not constitute a meaningfully distinct "category" of harassment.

Judge Flaum claimed only a "toehold in the case law" for this view, consisting of dictum by Judge Reinhardt and other cases that "describe a valid quid pro quo claim in terms that could encompass a situation based on threats only." <=119> Id. at 499 n.6 (emphasis added). It has been one of the points of this Article that with quid pro quo little reliance should be placed on what courts' prior statements "could encompass" (or exclude).

In addition to the authorities cited by Judge Flaum, see <=120> Robinson v. City of Pittsburgh, 120 F.3d 1286, 1297 (3d. Cir. 1997) (dictum that, under 1604.11(a)(1) of the EEOC's guidelines, "a quid pro quo violation occurs at the time when an employee is told that his or her compensation, etc. is dependent upon submission to unwelcome sexual advances"); <=121> Chamberlin v. 101 Realty, Inc., 915 F.2d 777, 783 (1st Cir. 1990) (dictum that "a supervisor's demand that an employee submit to an unwelcome sexual advance or face discharge could well constitute" quid pro quo harassment); <=122> Karibian v. Columbia University, 14 F.3d 773, 779 (2d Cir. 1994) ("Once an employer conditions any terms of employment upon the employee's submitting to unwelcome sexual advances, a quid pro quo harassment claim is made out, regardless of whether the employee (a) rejects the advances and suffers the consequences or (b) submits to the advances in order to avoid those consequences.... The focus should be on

of race or sex - that courts have obscured with an array of terms, tests,
and categories. <=2> n1 The United States Supreme Court confronts an example this spring: "quid pro quo sexual harassment," which it is asked to define in
Burlington Industries, Inc. v. Ellerth. <=3> n2

[*308] I argue here that the Court should demur - it should abandon quid pro quo rather than shoulder the pointless task of clarifying it. This Article will show that quid pro quo is so meaningful it is functionally meaningless.
It
is analytically useless and cumbersome, confounding the analysis of cases
to which it is applied and the law of sexual harassment generally. It should be eliminated as a functional category of discrimination.

In explaining why this is so, and in recounting quid pro quo's adventures
in the federal courts, this Article also aims to tell a cautionary tale about Title
VII's promiscuous terms, tests, and categories.

Introduction

There are two forms of sex discrimination in employment: "adverse job action"
and harassment. Adverse job action is termination, demotion, refusal to hire or promote, and the like. Sexual harassment is said to consist of unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature...when (1) submission to such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's

But as discussed immediately below, this sub-class, of an element, of a type, of quid pro quo discrimination hardly warrants retaining a functional "category" otherwise meriting elimination.

n48. Put another way, retaining the quid pro quo "category" of discrimination for the sake of the actionability of the quid pro quo proposition reflects the normative judgment that the proposition has so serious an effect on the employment relationship that it should not go unremedied. By this argument the proposition should rise or fall as environmental harassment, a category of discrimination devoted to conduct so "severe" as to alter the conditions of employment.

Half of the Seventh Circuit judges who sat in Jansen should be counted as votes for eliminating quid pro quo as a category of discrimination: Judge Wood and Judges Easterbrook and Rovner who joined her; and Chief Judge Posner and Judges Coffey and Manion, who would confine quid pro quo to adverse-job-action cases where it is unnecessary. See argument in Part II, supra.

discrete form and "category" of discrimination. It receives a 21-page sub-chapter in the leading treatise on the law of employment discrimination, Barbara Lindemann and Paul Grossman's Employment Discrimination Law. <=8> n7 Every federal appellate court recognizes quid pro quo as a category of harassment, and the Supreme Court mentioned it in both of its sexual harassment decisions prior to this Term. <=9> n8 In Burlington Industries the Court addresses quid pro quo head-on.

Catharine MacKinnon is credited with introducing quid pro quo to the analysis of sex discrimination in her influential 1979 book, Sexual Harassment of Working Women. Professor MacKinnon identified quid pro quo as taking three forms. In the first, there is a proposition, rejection, and retaliation. In the second, the woman complies and does not receive a job benefit. In the third, the woman complies and does benefit. MacKinnon identified a "fourth logical possibility" that, in her words, "does not require further discussion": "the woman refuses to comply, receives completely fair treatment on the job, and is never harassed again.... In this one turn of events, there truly is "no harm in asking.'" <=10> n9

The scenarios identified by Professor MacKinnon provide a loose framework for the discussion that follows.

II.

Quid Pro Quo as Adverse Job Action

Today no one disputes that the first quid pro quo pattern identified by MacKinnon - proposition, rejection, retaliation - is employment discrimination for which the employer is strictly liable. <=11> n10 In the 1982 decision Henson v. City of Dundee, <=12> n11 the Eleventh Circuit cited MacKinnon's book and held that quid pro quo discrimination occurs when a woman refuses sexual advances and consequently is "deprived of a job benefit which [*310] she was otherwise qualified to receive." <=13> n12 Henson was the first published federal decision to use quid pro quo to describe sex discrimination, and continues to be cited as the seminal quid pro quo case and as black letter law. <=14> n13

The result in Henson is clearly correct, but curious. Why did retaliatory job action require its own Latin name and "category" to be recognized as illegal sex discrimination? A woman was terminated (or refused employment) because she rejected sexual advances. <=15> n14 A jury could quickly infer that the advances - and hence the adverse employment action - were on account of her sex and therefore constituted sex discrimination in violation of Title VII. Why does it help analytically to call this quid pro quo? And why call it harassment?

The answer seems to be that in the 1970s some employers argued - and some courts agreed - that sexually-motivated conduct was "personal" and therefore not attributable to the company even when it resulted in adverse job action. In Tomkins v. Public Service Electric & Gas Co., ^{<=16> n15} the plaintiff alleged that when she became eligible for promotion her supervisor took her to lunch to "discuss her prospects with the firm"; he made sexual advances, she resisted, and rather than being promoted she was transferred, demoted, and eventually terminated. "The abuse of authority...for personal purposes is an unhappy and recurrent feature of our social experience," the court intoned, but it "is not...sex discrimination within the meaning of Title VII." ^{<=17> n16} In Barnes v. Train, ^{<=18> n17} the plaintiff claimed to have been terminated ^[*311] for refusing sexual advances; the case was dismissed with the terse judgment that it concerned "an inharmonious personal relationship." ^{<=19> n18} And in Williams v. Saxbe, ^{<=20> n19} the plaintiff alleged that she was terminated for refusing sexual advances. The defendant argued that "plaintiff has not made out a case of sex discrimination under the Act because the instant case was not the result of a policy of the office, but rather, was an isolated personal incident"; the court denied defendant's motion to dismiss, while agreeing that plaintiff would have to prove the retaliation was part of "policy or practice" and not "a non-employment related personal encounter." ^{<=21> n20}

In other words, sexual motivation once was used as a defense; it was defendants who distinguished what I will call quid pro quo "retaliation" cases from other adverse-job-action cases, characterized them as sexual harassment, and said that as such they were not actionable. ^{<=22> n21} When Professor MacKinnon argued at about this time that sexually-motivated mistreatment - fondling, verbal abuse - was actionable sex discrimination under Title VII, she naturally included quid pro quo retaliation cases within her claim. The snappy Latin name given these cases in an influential book about sexual harassment probably helped ensure that quid pro quo retaliation cases remained classified, as defendants had sought, as a kind of sexual harassment, rather than being trotted back to the adverse-job-action barn where they belonged. Thus was born a "class" of cases that was redundant virtually from its inception. ^{<=23> n22}

^[*312] Of course, quid pro quo retaliation is the other side of the coin from a scenario that plainly is sexual harassment and that is not actionable as adverse job action - the circumstance where the woman submits to the quid pro quo threat and her boss sexually abuses her. This other side of the coin is what quid pro quo means to be - the quid pro quo harasser means to extort sex, and in this sense the adverse-job-action case is the "unsuccessful" quid pro quo case.

Moreover, what I will call the quid pro quo "submission" case is a potent illustration of the use of the employment relationship to harass sexually.
For these reasons it would be understandable - which is not to say analytically sensible - that the quid pro quo submission case dominated the conception
quid pro quo and dragged the "unsuccessful" retaliation case with it to the "harassment" rubric. <=24> n23

But this raises a second and still more curious aspect of Henson and the adoption of quid pro quo: quid pro quo harassment was first recognized and long limited to its retaliatory form. "As in the typical disparate treatment case," the court noted in Henson, "the employee must prove that she was deprived
job benefit...." <=25> n24 The court fashioned from the Supreme Court's notorious McDonnell Douglas test the elements of a "prima facie" case of "a quid pro quo sexual harassment claim":

[*313]

- (1) The employee is a member of the protected class;
- (2) She was subjected to unwelcome sexual harassment to which members of
opposite sex had not been subjected;
- (3) She applied and was qualified for a position for which the employer was accepting applications;
- (4) That despite her qualification she was rejected;
- (5) That after her rejection, the position remained open and the employer
continued to accept applicants who possessed complainant's qualifications.
<=26> n25

The rule has been widely repeated. <=27> n26

Whatever the origin of the quid pro quo test for women who suffer adverse job action because they refuse to trade sex for work, today no reason exists to treat quid pro quo retaliation cases as a category of discrimination separate and apart from adverse job action simple. To be sure, the quid pro quo proposition supplies powerful direct evidence of discriminatory motive.
pro quo retaliation is an especially contemptible sort of adverse job action
may have great emotional effect on the plaintiff [*314] and jury; for these reasons, it will likely bear on damages. But in retaliation cases the term
quid pro quo does not distinguish illegal conduct from legal conduct. It is analytically superfluous and burdensome and should be abandoned.

III.

Quid Pro Quo as Harassment

To the foregoing critique one may add that in retaliation cases quid pro quo harassment is none of the above: the quid (sex) is withheld, so is the quo (work), and there is no harassment. <=28> n27 By contrast, in cases where the woman submits and is hired (or promoted) all three are present: quid is exchanged for quo and there is harassment. Perhaps, then, while abandoning the term quid pro quo in retaliation cases as just suggested, we should retain it for submission cases.

Treating the submission case as actionable quid pro quo harassment is consistent with the term's original definition. In two of the three quid pro quo scenarios identified by Professor MacKinnon, the woman submits. <=29> n28 The restrictive quid pro quo definition traces to Henson, but even there it may have been unintended; the court observed at one point: "On a practical level, of course, there are many cases that could be characterized interchangeably as [hostile work environment harassment] or quid pro quo cases." <=30> n29 This statement makes little sense if the court is excluding the submission case from quid pro quo. <=31> n30 The Henson opinion exudes a certain excitement at being first - the court had a chance to add a Latin term to the Title VII lexicon and show off a new five-part riff on the McDonnell Douglas test - and perhaps, in its enthusiasm to define quid pro quo, the court lost sight of what it meant.

Today, the ascendant view is that quid pro quo harassment is actionable when the woman submits. The leading case is the Second Circuit's Karibian v. Columbia University, <=32> n31 which recognizes that quid pro quo comprises both "'refusal' cases" and [*315] "'submission' cases." <=33> n32 Chief Judge Posner recently advocated limiting quid pro quo liability to "company acts" such as hiring and firing - the rule of Henson. It is a sign of the times (if not of thorough research) that he described his position as un-"orthodox," indeed "novel[]." <=34> n33

To the extent the ascendant view prevails and quid pro quo is defined to include both retaliation and submission cases, it will become something more than the functionally useless "category" of discrimination examined in the preceding section. It will become affirmatively confusing. Consider the treatment in the 1996 edition of the leading discrimination law treatise. Lindemann and Grossman begins by citing Henson and identifying "adverse employment action" as an element of a quid pro quo claim. <=35> n34 But in discussing the adverse-job-action element, the treatise stumbles against Karibian and its holding that the woman who submits has a quid pro quo claim. The editors rally by suggesting that for submission cases "threatened" economic harm is enough. <=36> n35 This is a valiant effort to shore up a doctrine in collapse, but it fails for several reasons. First, a threat is not "actual economic harm"; saying that it is fundamentally alters the requirement. Second, this variant of the Henson test not only eliminates an element ("actual economic harm"), it adds one - submission. And third, when push comes to shove, those who favor a quid pro quo action for submission cases are unlikely to stand by the requirement of a threat, since in one classic submission scenario no threat occurs: the woman is promised a job or promotion in exchange for sex, and submits. <=37> n36 The Henson [*316] test has just cracked from trying to do two jobs at once: define adverse job action and sexual harassment.

The problem with using quid pro quo to refer both to retaliation and submission cases extends beyond the difficulty of formulating a single McDonnell Douglas test to accommodate both; it reaches the term's very serviceability as a definition. Quid pro quo harassment is where actual economic harm occurs, or does not. It is where a threat is made - or a promise. It is where a woman submits, or does not. State that a case involves quid pro quo harassment, and you will have left unsaid whether the plaintiff gained a job or lost one, and whether the alleged damages are emotional or economic. You will have said little more than that the suit involves sex discrimination. This is a definition so broad that it fails its assigned task - defining.

Of course, this confusion is avoided if quid pro quo no longer includes the retaliation case, as argued in the previous section, and comprises submission cases only. Perhaps, in other words, quid pro quo should not mean what it did and should mean what it did not? Before reincarnating quid pro quo in this form, however, we must ask of the submission case what we asked of the retaliation case - what gap does it fill in existing doctrine? Environmental harassment exists when "unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct...has the...effect of...creating an intimidating, hostile, or offensive working environment." <=38> n37 The woman who is forced to engage in unwanted sex with her boss to keep her job has satisfied these elements. She can state a claim for environmental harassment. <=39> n38

[*317] To be sure, the quid pro quo proposition is important evidence. Just as the quid pro quo retaliation case is a strong adverse-job-action case, so the quid pro quo submission case often will be stronger than the environmental harassment claim that lacks an express threat of retaliation. The supervisor's overt threat and extortion will likely cause a jury to regard the experience as especially "intimidating," "offensive," and "hostile." The quid pro quo element is not necessary, however, to distinguish the impermissible from the permissible. Rather, just as the Henson test adds a superfluous element (sexual advances) to the test for adverse-job-action discrimination simple, so the quid pro quo submission test adds an element (threatened or promised job action) that one can omit and still state a claim under Title VII.

We now have eliminated the second of the two scenarios thought to warrant quid pro quo's treatment as a discrete form and category of discrimination: in "submission" cases, as in "retaliation" cases, the concept is redundant of existing doctrine and therefore analytically unnecessary and cumbersome. We also have an affirmative reason to jettison the term: it covers the entire waterfront of discrimination - adverse job action and harassment - and doctrinal confusion results.

IV.

Quid Without Quo - No Harassment in Case of Breach of Contract?

The preceding discussion of "submission" cases conflated Professor MacKinnon's second and third scenarios: under both scenarios the woman submits, but under the second the job is denied. One could argue that technically MacKinnon is wrong and there is no quid pro quo harassment in this situation: The essence of quid pro quo is conditioning a job benefit on sex. In the retaliation case, the condition is enforced. In the submission case, it is satisfied. In the quid without quo scenario, however, the conditioning never occurs.

[*318] This absurd result - barring quid pro quo claims when the plaintiff was coerced to have sex but obtained no job benefit - is dictated by the Henson test as it has come to be stated. For instance, Lindemann and Grossman's adaptation of the Henson test provides that "the complainant's reaction to the sexual advance [must have] affected a tangible aspect of the complainant's term, condition, or privilege of employment." <=40> n39 The treatise's use of the word "reaction" (rather than "refusal") artfully accommodates the submission case (although the test's requirement of adverse job action remains an obstacle to the submission case, as shown supra). But in the quid without quo scenario, the "reaction" has no "effect"; therefore, if we take the Henson test seriously, there can be no claim of quid pro quo. In Lipsett v. University of Puerto Rico, <=41> n40 the First Circuit dutifully cited Henson for the proposition that a quid pro quo plaintiff must show (1) unwelcome sexual advances and (2) "that his or her reaction to these advances affected tangible aspects" of employment. <=42> n41 "In rebuttal," the court continued, "the defendant may show the behavior complained of either did not take place or that it did not affect a tangible aspect of the plaintiff's employment." <=43> n42 Elsewhere the court wrote:

The gist of a quid pro quo claim is that the plaintiff is threatened by the harasser with demands for a sexual encounter. If the plaintiff rejects those demands, then the threats may become real - that is, he or she may lose a job.... Conversely, the plaintiff may accede to those demands out of fear.... He or she may then be rewarded for this compliance. If the plaintiff is threatened, and if the plaintiff is rewarded or punished, then there is quid pro quo harassment. <=44> n43

[*319] I have not found a case where the employer defended a quid pro quo claim with evidence that although the proposition was made and the woman submitted to unwanted sex, a white male got the job. Confronted with that argument, the First Circuit surely would manage to distinguish its statements in Lipsett. That would be the right result - discrimination requires discrimination, not a fully-executed contract. It is the realness of the offensive sexual contact or adverse job action that determines legality, not
realness of the conditioning. But that this "element" of quid pro quo would not be given effect reveals another respect in which quid pro quo is a flawed
and misleading "category" of discrimination: it is an analytic construct requiring a formal conditioning of employment on sex that the law itself does not demand, as the hostile environment cases show. Quid pro quo is a powerful concept that, when applied, injects needless formalism and complexity to the analysis of employment discrimination.

V.

"No Harm in Asking" and the Standard of Employer Liability

Two reasons might still be given for retaining quid pro quo as a discrete category of discrimination. One is Professor MacKinnon's "fourth logical possibility": "the woman refuses to comply, receives completely fair treatment on the job, and is never harassed again." <=45> n44 MacKinnon concluded that this fourth scenario "does not require further discussion" because "in this one turn of events, there truly is "no harm in asking.'" <=46> n45 Some today disagree. In the Seventh Circuit's Jansen decision, Judge Flaum was joined by five colleagues in advocating that a single quid pro quo threat be actionable.
<=47> n46

[*320] On this score it seems safe to agree with MacKinnon that the
quid
pro quo threat is insufficiently harmful to warrant suit under Title VII.
Saying
"You're an incompetent stupid female bitch" a single time is not actionable environmental harassment. Why should suit lie for saying "I don't have time

The editors invited me to offer advice to the next President. This was difficult, because a draft was due before we knew who the next President would be: In one circumstance I would advise forceful assertion of executive powers. In the other circumstance my advice might have been, "Resign! Admit Your Transgressions!"

I have had to select an area of the law, then, where the nation would benefit from the candidates of both major parties heeding the same advice. It also has the virtue of being my principal area of practice, labor and employment law.

Practitioners speak of "labor" and "employment" law as two distinct fields, with "labor" law encompassing labor-management relations - unionization, strikes, collective bargaining, and the law under the National Labor Relations Act ("NLRA") <=2> n1 - and "employment" law encompassing everything else: discrimination, wage and hour regulation, occupational health and safety, wrongful termination, etc. Some practitioners still proudly identify themselves as "real" labor lawyers, by which they mean they are of the cigar-chomping, rough-and-tumble world of labor-management relations. Not for them, the delicacies of the discrimination laws and individual rights litigation.

n19. The overtime requirement and professional exemption are at <=60>
U.S.C. 207 and 213(a)(1) (2000), respectively. Labor Department regulations requiring professionals to be paid on a salary basis are at 29 C.F.R. 541.312 & 541.118 (2000). Note that the Labor Department has no authority to require payment on a salary basis; its statutory authority is merely to define what it means to be an exempt professional. See <=61> 29 U.S.C. 213(a)(1) (2000).
By making payment on a salary basis part of the definition of an exempt professional, however, the Department effectively has required that professionals (and executives and administrative employees) be salaried - the penalty for non-compliance is that exempt status is lost and the company owes often considerable backpay. This salary-basis requirement increasingly is at odds with how professionals wish to be compensated, as more and more seek part-time arrangements, stock options, and the like.

This appears to be a common problem in administrative law: An agency's definitional authority to determine the coverage of a regulation functions as de facto regulation of those who properly are - and wish to remain - outside the regulation's ambit. This de facto regulation sometimes operates as to matters well outside the agency's statutory mandate. In further defining what it means to be an exempt, "salaried" employee, for instance, the Labor Department has developed intricate requirements that professionals (and executives and administrative employees) be paid for jury duty and part-day absences, see 29 C.F.R. 541.118(a)(4) (2000), even though the governing statute regulates only how much employees are paid when they work. Consider also the Transportation Department's proposed amended "hours of service" rules: The Department's statutory authority is to regulate the hours that truckers drive, in order

avert accidents caused by fatigue. The Department sensibly recognizes that some companies do little driving and therefore warrant less scrutiny - but in defining which companies will receive less scrutiny, the proposed rules restrict

Similarly, MIT Professor Thomas Kochran, President of the Industrial Relations Research Association ("IRRA"), has suggested that in the case of "responsible" employers with labor unions or other effective means of employee representation, the government should "provide more flexibility" in achieving "labor policy objectives." Kochran identified safety and health, wage and hour, family and medical leave, and nondiscrimination as regulatory areas where this flexibility would be appropriate. Thomas A. But see <=83> Livadas v. Bradshaw, 512 U.S. 107 (1994). Livadas illustrates the Supreme Court's occasional suggestion that unionized companies alone must be doubly regulated, once by their union and again by the government. The Many discrimination lawyers, meanwhile, know as much about the NLRA as your average telecommunications lawyer.

Our federal labor and employment laws and policy embody the same disjunction: Federal employment laws are written and enforced with little regard to whether the workforce they are [*490] applied to is unionized. This Article argues that this state of affairs is one unions and business - and hence, roughly speaking, Democrats and Republicans - should want to end.

I.

The NLRA was one of the first federal laws to regulate the workplace and reflects a very different approach toward regulation than federal "employment" laws. It is constitutive, intended to establish a framework by which employees may achieve for themselves the things the employment laws provide by direct intervention. Specifically, the NLRA establishes and protects workers' right to act collectively to improve the terms and conditions of their employment. It is intended to set a rough parity between labor and management, so the two may contend on a relatively level playing field to achieve employment terms that improve the workers' lot without bankrupting the company (what we management lawyers call killing the goose that lays the golden egg).

Federal employment laws, most of which post-date the NLRA, supply directly many of the things that labor unions strive to achieve through bargaining. <=3> n2 Unions bargain for increased wages, for instance; the Fair Labor Standards Act ("FLSA") directly establishes a minimum wage and requires overtime pay at time-and-a-half for most employees working past 40 hours a week. <=4> n3 Workplace safety often is an important union bargaining objective and also is the objective of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration ("OSHA"). <=5> n4 Similarly, the Family and Medical Leave Act <=6> n5 entitles workers to a leave of absence when the worker or a close family member has a serious health condition; collective bargaining agreements typically provide similar (or better) benefits.

Unions are among the principal advocates of employment [*491] regulation. By raising costs for rival non-union companies, employment regulations help union companies preserve market share and thus protect union jobs and wages. Employment laws also raise the floor from which unions commence negotiations. And of course, many union leaders advocate employment regulation in the genuine altruistic belief that it will improve workers' conditions generally. There is a substantial academic literature, however, suggesting that by boosting direct employment regulation, unions gradually have put themselves out of business.

The more that favorable pay, benefits, and working conditions are set by the United States Congress, the less workers see a point in paying union dues to achieve the same things. <=7> n6 Today 9.4 percent of the private-sector workforce is unionized, <=8> n7 compared with approximately 16.8 percent in 1983 <=9> n8 and 38 percent in 1956. <=10> n9

There is also a substantial academic literature, sympathetic to unions, which contends that the real cause of unions' decline is increased business hostility toward unions. This literature maintains that over the years "rogue employers" have perfected methods of flouting the labor laws, and thus have been able to prevent employees from organizing and, on those rare occasions when unions manage to win an election, have [*492] prevented them from achieving collective bargaining agreements. <=11> n10 The playing field is not level after all, these critics argue, and the solution is to amend the labor laws to arm unions with some of the gleaming weaponry of the plaintiffs' bar, such as punitive damages. <=12> n11

This Article suggests that instead of attempting to revive the American labor movement by adjusting the relative might of labor and management under the NLRA, the new Administration should consider an integrated labor and employment policy that gives management less reason to oppose unionization. For a Republican President, this would mean viewing unionization as an alternative means of regulating the employment relationship, a means that has more in common with conservative principles of limited government than does direct intervention through employment laws. For a Democratic President, this would mean honoring a core party principle: faith in labor unions. For all of us, it would mean ending our anti-union federal employment policy.

II.

When I say federal employment policy is anti-union, I mean that federal employment laws take little account of the advantages unionization is supposed to give workers, and sometimes treat unions as less capable of vindicating employee [*493] interests than individual workers acting on their own behalf.

Employees often know better than Washington bureaucrats how to improve their workplace: This Republican-sounding principle animated the most ambitious OSHA enforcement program of the Clinton Administration. In 1997 OSHA unveiled its "Cooperative Compliance Program" ("CCP"), which offered companies a sharply reduced likelihood of inspection if they adopted a set of safety measures not currently required by existing OSHA regulations. <=13> n12 The central measure gave employees a leading role in identifying and correcting workplace hazards.

This "Cooperative Compliance Program" improperly sought to force new obligations on employers without notice and comment rulemaking (employers dubbed it the "Coercive Compliance Program"), and for that reason was invalidated by the D.C. Circuit. <=14> n13 But the program was right in its premise that workplaces where employees are empowered to address safety and health conditions are less in need of government scrutiny. Exempting such workplaces from neutral inspection programs (such as CCP purported to be <=15> n14) is especially sensible since those inspections programs are not OSHA's only means of targeting employers for inspection - employees can also trigger inspection by complaining to OSHA of unsafe conditions. <=16> n15 Thus, unionized employees whose workplace was fully exempt from programmed OSHA inspections could still summon OSHA inspectors if the company failed to address safety problems the union identified.

[*494] OSHA's CCP program did not seem to recognize that a company with a labor union might already, for decades, have had just the sort of effective employee involvement in safety that CCP was intended to foster. The program allowed no presumption that unionized companies already had employee involvement in safety, for instance, even though workplace safety is a basic union objective. And the program set out a blueprint for employee safety programs that seemed unaware of methods of employee participation that had worked for sixty-five years under federal labor law. When CCP was stayed by the D.C. Circuit and later struck down, OSHA reverted to a programmed inspection plan that focused heavily on companies that were unionized - at least thirteen facilities of Ford Motor Company were targeted, for instance. <=17> n16 How odd for OSHA to concentrate so heavily on one of the most successfully unionized companies in the country, a company regarded as having developed an especially sophisticated safety program with its union.

In fact, however, it is quite common for federal employment laws to give little if any consideration to unions' capacity to regulate employer behavior. A few examples:

. The OSH Act contains a whistleblower protection provision that prohibits employers from discriminating against an employee for making a complaint to OSHA. <=18> n17 Regulations implementing the provision suggest that if an employee complains of retaliation to OSHA and to his union, the agency should consider awaiting the outcome of the labor-management dispute resolution process. If that process is "fair and regular" and its result consistent with the OSH Act, OSHA is to consider deferring to the result. <=19> n18 I have handled numerous whistleblower cases under the OSH Act, and virtually every time pointed the agency to its own regulations and urged that it defer to a labor-management grievance and arbitration process. The agency has never agreed.

One investigator told me the policy was to defer to the grievance [*495] and arbitration process only if the employee consented. This is deference to the employee; it shows no respect for unionization or the process employees collectively have put in place to protect their rights.

. The Fair Labor Standards Act - which governs minimum wages and overtime

- also generally is applied without regard to whether the compensation plan at issue is established unilaterally by the employer, or instead is the product of negotiation with, and perhaps the insistence of, a labor union. I helped defend an aerospace manufacturer a few years ago in a putative class action by engineers who claimed the company had erred in classifying them as "professionals" exempt from the overtime requirement of the FLSA. Labor Department regulations require that exempt professionals perform professional duties and be paid on a "salary basis." <=20> n19 These engineers performed professional duties, and under their [*496] collective bargaining agreement they received salaries as high as $ 120,000. The agreement also provided overtime pay, but at a straight-time rate rather than at time-and-a-half as the FLSA requires for non-exempt workers. The plaintiffs claimed that because they were paid overtime, they were not truly "salaried" professionals but were non-exempt workers entitled to overtime at time-and-a-half. That is, plaintiffs' claim was that because they were paid overtime, their rights had been violated. Had their union not successfully bargained for overtime, they literally would have had no complaint at all.

The court dismissed the case on the ground that plaintiffs' receipt of overtime pay over and above their generous salaries did not spoil their exempt status. <=21> n20 It would have been equally sensible, and more direct, for the court to rule that workers could not collectively challenge a generous compensation package they previously collectively had bargained for through their certified representative. Current law does not permit such an argument, however. <=22> n21

. Under the civil rights laws, pre-dispute arbitration agreements entered into by employees individually are given more force than similar agreements negotiated by powerful labor unions acting on employees' behalf. In Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp., <=23> n22 the plaintiff sued his employer for age discrimination. The employer objected that the plaintiff, as a condition of employment, had contracted to arbitrate discrimination claims. The Supreme Court agreed and enforced the arbitration agreement. Every federal appellate circuit to consider the issue but one - the Ninth Circuit <=24> n23 - has

Gilmer's holding to Title VII and other discrimination laws. <=25> n24 Such pre-dispute arbitration agreements are now in wide use, [*497] as businesses seek to resolve employment disputes more expeditiously and with less cost for

Normally employees sign such pre-dispute arbitration agreements when they are hired, with little deliberation or negotiation. Those who criticize using the agreements to exclude civil rights plaintiffs from court contend there is unequal bargaining power between the lone employee who may desperately need
income and, on the other hand, a large company with (supposedly) numerous qualified applicants from which to choose. Suppose, then, that a mandatory arbitration agreement is not entered into as a condition of employment, and suppose it is not entered into by a lone, unrepresented employee but by a labor union thousands of members strong with the capacity to inflict a punishing strike if the company does not come to terms - well, in that event, the agreement is wholly unenforceable in nearly every federal court in the country.
<=26> n25

The source of this rule is Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co., <=27> n26
a 1974 Supreme Court decision rooted in a distaste for arbitration in general and unions in particular. (1974 may have marked a low point in the nation's confidence in labor unions, and a high point in courts' estimation of their own role in addressing discrimination.) The Fourth Circuit considers Gardner-Denver to be overruled by Gilmer; <=28> n27 the Supreme Court dodged the issue
1998 decision. <=29> n28 Thus, we have the circumstance that an [*498] agreement achieved by a labor union - which the NLRA and theories of collective action presume to be a far more effective negotiating agent than an individual employee - is not enforceable; but an agreement signed by an individual employee as a condition of employment - which the employee presumably give little attention at the time of hiring - is enforceable.

The D.C. Circuit recently took this perverse jurisprudence to its logical conclusion, holding that because unions cannot negotiate enforceable pre-dispute arbitration agreements for discrimination claims, such agreements are not a mandatory subject of bargaining with a union. <=30> n29 Therefore, the court ruled, an employer can enter such agreements directly with union members, over the union's objection and despite the labor laws' strong prohibition on "direct dealing" with unionized employees. <=31> n30 How odd, that mandatory arbitration of discrimination claims has been approved and even encouraged by courts for a decade, but is not trusted in the context where employment dispute arbitration arose and has its richest history.

III.

My advice for the next President, then, is the following: End our anti-union federal employment policy; trust labor unions a bit more.

The exemption of union companies from employment regulation should not be total. But at minimum, exemption should be considered from programmed OSHA inspections and from the intricate overtime requirements of the FLSA. In addition, union-negotiated agreements to arbitrate discrimination claims ought to be given at least as much effect as the same agreements entered into by individuals. <=32> n31

[*499] Can unions be trusted to handle discrimination claims? I believe so. Indeed unions face incentives that arguably are better for employees than the financial incentives of plaintiffs' lawyers. Plaintiffs' attorneys ordinarily receive the bulk of their compensation as a percentage of the award or settlement. This creates an incentive to seek a high monetary award in lieu of other forms of relief. As enacted, Title VII espoused a primary aim of conciliation and putting victims of discrimination back to work, but that aim often is lost in a world where most discrimination claims are handled by lawyers who stand to gain more if the employee receives cash in lieu of reinstatement. I litigated one federal discrimination case where the plaintiff could not get along with her supervisor and was seeking a position in another division of the company. Shortly after her lawyers came on the scene, however, she quit her job, claimed she was forced out, and sued for constructive discharge. The constructive discharge claim was potentially more valuable to the lawyers than resolving the workplace [*500] dispute, but it proved insupportable and the plaintiff was left with a negligible settlement. By contrast, I have arbitrated a number of discrimination claims under a collective bargaining agreement that incorporates federal discrimination laws by reference. In those cases the lawyers had been retained by the union on an hourly basis, and they made sincere and persistent efforts to achieve reinstatement (as well as backpay) for the employee. <=33> n32

To be sure, some unions have had a history of discrimination and it is reasonable to question whether they always will exert themselves on behalf of women and racial minorities alleging discrimination. Unions have made great progress in integration, however, just as American business has. Perhaps more to the point, unions face serious penalties for sloughing off claims on account of the grievant's race or sex or the like: Unions owe a "duty of fair representation" to their members, and may be sued under federal law for failing to vigorously process grievances for discriminatory reasons. <=34> n33 Union representatives are quite mindful of that constraint; some confess to erring on the side of prosecuting grievances they believe are without merit to avoid

for violating the duty of fair representation. In the words of one union officer:

If somebody comes in and writes a grievance, whether I believe it is contractually correct or not ... , I will process that grievance, or other grievances, because No. 1, if I don't they'll sue me, and No. 2, quite honestly,
I can pass that grievance that I feel has no merit up the food chain. It goes to the grievance panel.

Q [Arbitrator]: Maybe you've missed your calling. I think you should become a lawyer.

[*501] A: No, sir. You all are all nice folks, but I spend more time with you than I care to. <=35> n34

A union discriminating against a member because of race or sex may also be sued under Title VII. <=36> n35

With respect to exemption from OSHA regulation, a different objection might be raised: What do unions know about permissible exposure limits for toxic substances and other difficult scientific questions, on which OSHA has (some) expertise? A regime that gave employers and unions more latitude under the safety and health laws need not require unions to eschew federal regulations, however. The union could still negotiate for the workplace to be covered by specific OSHA regulations, for instance, but might provide that OSHA rules incorporated by reference in the collective bargaining agreement would be enforced by the union through the agreement's processes, rather than by the agency through federal enforcement actions. Or, the degree of exemption could be varied, depending, for instance, on the obviousness of the hazard being regulated. At minimum, it would seem there is little value to OSHA conducting "random" inspections of unionized workplaces: The union is there to identify safety and health problems, take them up with the employer and then, if a satisfactory resolution is not achieved, either to arbitrate the claim (if covered by the collective bargaining agreement) or to complain to OSHA as a last resort. <=37> n36 This approach would preserve OSHA's resources and enable it to concentrate on other, non-union companies; would credit the agency's belief that companies with employee involvement in safety are less in [*502] need of inspection; and would show appropriate respect toward American labor unions and our federal labor law.

And if some day unions became so attractive that employers formed phony ones to stave off federal regulation, labor law provides an answer to that too: The NLRA prohibits employers from propping up "company-dominated" unions in lieu of the real thing. <=38> n37

CONCLUSION

Labor unions are not perfect. Full exemption of unionized companies from federal regulation would be a mistake. There are additional factors to be considered before implementing even the modest exemptions sketched out above. But those in government who profess confidence in labor unions need to consider how federal employment law could better reflect that faith. And those in government who advocate less federal regulation, and more local control, need to consider how unions could help bring that about.

Sorry I wasn't available to respond to this until now. The addition looks fine to me. However, I agree with Martha's comment below; it's important to ensure the statement is accurate.

I have no comment, other than are we sure the second sentence is accurate?

Subject: RE: Draft SAP for Senate Terrorism Insurance bill - 2nd draft

Proposal to add to SAP:

Reasonable litigation management procedures are an essential element of any terrorism insurance bill. For many companies facing rising insurance premiums, the increased costs result almost entirely from the risk of litigation. In addition, the federal program exposes taxpayer dollars, and litigation management procedures are therefore necessary to manage excessive and unnecessary costs resulting from litigation. Finally, litigation procedures will ensure an orderly process that will help resolve claims more expeditiously and thereby benefit plaintiffs and defendants alike.

Subject: Updated Draft of the Burton Letter

Subject to WH Counsel approval, I think OLA is fine with the OLC revision. Attached is that revised draft (with what Faith told me are John Durham's edits incorporated) (please ignore any minor typos, i was cutting/pasting and moving fast; be assured this letter will be pristine before its signed and sent).

Please review this draft and provide additional edits/suggestions directly to Faith and me ASAP. We'd like to send this letter by noon tomorrow if possible. Thanks.

Subject to WH Counsel approval, I think OLA is fine with the OLC revision. Attached is that revised draft (with what Faith told me are John Durham's edits incorporated) (please ignore any minor typos, i was cutting/pasting and moving fast; be assured this letter will be pristine before its signed and sent).

Please review this draft and provide additional edits/suggestions directly to Faith and me ASAP. We'd like to send this letter by noon tomorrow if possible. Thanks.

Here is the article from Sunday's Phil Inquirer.

U.S. overstates arrests in terrorism

By Mark Fazlollah and Peter Nicholas
INQUIRER WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON - The Department of Justice has overstated its record of arresting and convicting terrorists for years, inflating the numbers it gives Congress with garden-variety crimes that have no connection to terrorism.

The practice has continued even after Sept. 11, when attacks on New York's

REV_00138180

World Trade Center and the Pentagon underscored the horror of real terrorism.

Current and former Justice Department officials say the reports showing inflated terrorism convictions are provided to Congress as supporting material to justify the department's $22 billion annual budget, which includes counterterrorism funding.

"It's awful," said Sen. Arlen Specter (R., Pa.), a former Intelligence Committee chairman, after The Inquirer showed him some of the cases classified as terrorism. "It's more than problem-some - it's awful."

Cases labeled as terrorism involve erratic behavior by people with mental illnesses, passengers getting drunk on airplanes, and convicts rioting to get better prison food. There were the Mexican who concocted a phony passport application, the former court employee who shoved and threatened a judge, the babbling man who walked into an FBI office and threatened to kill former President Bill Clinton - though he didn't realize Clinton was no longer president.

Cases such as these, improperly labeled as terrorism, continue to wind through the court system.

In one vivid example, an assistant U.S. attorney in San Francisco asked U.S. District Judge Marilyn H. Patel on Monday to stiffen a sentence against an Arizona man who got drunk on a United Airlines flight from Shanghai, repeatedly rang the call button, demanded more liquor, and put his hands on a flight attendant. Justice Department records show the case as "domestic terrorism."

The judge told the prosecutor who argued the case that it wasn't terrorism - rather a man "being an annoyance beyond belief."

The most recent Justice Department annual report, issued in May, says that in the fiscal year ending in September 2000, FBI investigations led to 236 terrorism convictions. That number is generated from an FBI computer system that follows criminal cases from beginning to end.

"I promise you there weren't 200 convictions in the last year for what you and I think of as terrorism," said Thomas G. Connolly, who served as an assistant U.S. attorney in suburban Washington and received the CIA's Intelligence Medallion for his prosecution of CIA-agent-turned-Russian-spy James Nicholson in 1997.

On Friday, Patrick J. Leahy (D., Vt.) said he wants information from the Justice Department to explain what is being classified as "terrorism."

"As the department seeks new power in terrorism cases, it is important that we know the types of cases that the department is trying to sweep within that definition," said Leahy, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

In testimony before Congress this month, Attorney General John Ashcroft gave a succinct definition of a terrorist: "Since 1983, the U.S. government has defined terrorists as those who perpetrate premeditated, politically motivated violence against noncombatant targets."

The Justice Department did not respond to repeated written requests for comment about terrorism statistics. One department official, who did not want to be named, said she would not "rule out" the possibility that benign cases find their way into the terrorism category.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Matthew Jacobs of the federal prosecutor's office in San Francisco said that "from our perspective, you shouldn't read too much into the categorization."

During the last three years, San Francisco listed more "domestic terrorism" cases than any of the 93 other U.S. attorneys' offices. From September 1998 until September 2001, the San Francisco office was headed by Robert S. Mueller, now director of the FBI.

Why are the numbers important?

Statistics on arrests and convictions, including those related to the hot-button issue of terrorism, are a measuring stick for the Justice Department. They are submitted to the department's outside auditors, used to assess the performance of the U.S. attorneys' offices, and made available to the public in an annual report.

"In some ways, the Justice Department continues to operate under the body count approach in Vietnam," said Jonathan Turley, who teaches constitutional criminal procedure at George Washington University Law School. "They feel a need to produce a body count to Congress to justify past appropriations and secure future increases."

The government would not release details of the 236 cases identified as terrorism in the Justice Department's latest annual report.

But The Inquirer reviewed dozens of cases over a five-year period ending Sept. 30. The information was obtained under the Freedom of Information Act by Syracuse University's TRAC Resource Center, which collects data from various federal agencies.

Some of the cases listed as terrorism were clearly a stretch. Here is a sampling:

A tenant fighting eviction called his landlord, impersonated an FBI agent, and said the bureau did not want the tenant evicted. The landlord recognized the man's voice and called the real FBI.

A man from Ecuador tried to hide 12 pistols in a television set he was sending home from Miami. He admitted he planned to resell the guns for a profit in Ecuador.

A commercial pilot in Seattle pleaded guilty to falsely implicating his copilot in a bogus plot to hijack a private airplane. The case boiled down to two men feuding.

Seven Chinese sailors were convicted of taking over a Taiwanese fishing boat and sailing to the U.S. territory of Guam, where they hoped to win political asylum.

A man under treatment in California told his doctor he needed anti-psychotic medication because he was hearing voices telling him to kill President Bush.

Others clearly did involve terrorism, such as the bombing of Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia in 1996, and the conviction of Algerian Ahmed Ressay in a plot to bomb Los Angeles International Airport two years ago. The records also included the Sept. 27 arrest of three men in a Detroit apartment allegedly occupied by an associate of Osama bin Laden.

And the indictment of Zacarias Moussaoui, a suspected al-Qaeda conspirator in the Sept. 11 attacks, appears certain to fall into the terrorism category.

Some federal prosecutors expressed concern about the cases that clearly do not measure up.

Karon Johnson, an assistant U.S. attorney who won conviction of the seven Chinese sailors for commandeering the boat, said the goal of the men was to find jobs, not practice terror. "This isn't a political crime - this is economic," she said.

Prosecutors said there has been confusion about the definition of terrorism, and there have been no recent instructions from the Justice Department to clarify it in coding cases.

In any case, prosecutors usually are not responsible for the terrorism classification. That is often left to the discretion of supervisors or others in the U.S. attorneys' offices across the country.

"There's a great desire to take any case, and incident, and place it under the terrorism category to show some return for all these appropriations," said Turley, of George Washington University Law School.

Sen. Judd Gregg (R., N.H.), the ranking member of the subcommittee that oversees the Justice Department's budget, said that he did not think terrorism convictions played a part in the budget process.

But former department officials and congressional aides see a link.

"They can be used to justify overall budget increases for large swaths of the agency," said David Sirota, Democratic spokesman for the House Appropriations Committee.

The Justice Department's budget was passed into law last month. Discussions are already beginning on the fiscal year 2003 budget. The $22 billion is used to fund prosecutions of criminal and civil cases, secure the nation's borders, and investigate a wide variety of federal crimes involving drugs, guns, civil rights - and terrorism.

Holder said: "It's just not the right thing to go up [to Capitol Hill] with numbers that aren't meaningful. It hurts your credibility."

I just heard that Dan Burton, along with other members, is planning a press conference today at 2 to attack DOJ and the refusal to release the Boston documents. Apparently he is going to say something along the lines of "they expect us to trust them but they are padding their terrorist numbers and statistics." I don't know what he is referring to, it could be the TRAC data statistics that came out a few weeks ago. I don't know who else will be with them or if any other member is going to speak.

So you think it would be inappropriate for us to talk to Bar Associations to find out exactly what they would be willing to coordinate and whether they would be willing to organize a "desk" of lawyers at the site? Could the Special Master's office do that?

ATT CREATION TIME/DATE: 0 00:00:00.00

Today, consistent with President Bush's recent executive order on Presidential records, the National Archives and Records Administration has been authorized to publicly release thousands of pages of otherwise privileged records from former President Reagan's library. These documents represent all that have been forwarded to the Administration thus far from the Reagan Library, and this is only one of what will be many routine releases of former Presidents' records, including many otherwise privileged records, pursuant to President Bush's new order.

Today's action no doubt will come as a surprise to those who have launched uninformed and unfair attacks on President Bush's recent order. The release of these records (and the anticipated release of thousands of additional pages in the near future) demonstrates that the President's order can and will facilitate appropriate public release of Presidential records.

The legal background to the President's order has been largely absent from the public debate thus far, so I will summarize it: The Presidential Records Act of 1978 provides that records of former Presidents are generally not subject to mandatory public disclosure requirements for 12 years after the end of the Presidency. After that 12-year period has elapsed, Presidential records must be made publicly available -- subject either to (i) claims by the former or current President of a constitutional privilege, including the privilege for confidential communications, or (ii) certain other legal exemptions such as national security and personal privacy.

President Bush's recent executive order was necessary to establish workable procedures and time periods for former and current Presidents to review and, if they so choose, assert constitutional privileges over sensitive Presidential records after the 12-year period has elapsed. Some critics have nonetheless contended that President Bush's recent order is inconsistent with the Presidential Records Act of 1978 on the theory that the Act itself requires release of Presidential records -- including privileged records -- after expiration of the statute's 12-year period. That is simply wrong. The Presidential Records Act expressly recognizes that former and current Presidents can assert constitutional privileges over Presidential records, including after the statutory 12-year period has elapsed.

Many also have complained that a former President should have no right to assert privileges over his records. That criticism blatantly ignores the law. The Supreme Court, in its landmark 1977 Nixon v. GSA decision written by Justice Brennan, definitively held that the Constitution guarantees former Presidents the right to assert privileges over their records.

Many critics of the President's order fail to mention this binding Supreme Court precedent, or the Act's express guarantee of the former and current President's right to assert privileges. Unlike the critics, however, in establishing appropriate procedures for review of Presidential records and privilege assertions, President Bush was not free to ignore the law established by the Supreme Court and Congress simply to reach a desired policy result.

A few critics also have tried to generate public and congressional criticism of the President by arguing that the order is an attempt to block the release of Presidential records. That, too, is inaccurate. The order sets up procedures for expeditious review of documents, and appropriately refrains from indicating whether and under what circumstances privilege should be asserted.

Nor, contrary to the suggestions of some, does a requester of Presidential records need to make any showing of need to request records. If the former or current President asserts a privilege in response to a request, and the requester chooses to challenge that privilege claim in court, the requester only then must satisfy whatever standards the courts have established for constitutional privilege claims.

The fact that the President's order establishes procedures for former Presidents to protect their constitutionally guaranteed privileges does not mean, moreover, that former Presidents must or will improperly assert such privileges. History (and today's release) proves as much. Even before the Presidential Records Act was enacted, at a time when former Presidents enjoyed complete control over the disposition of their Presidential records, most former Presidents authorized release over time of the vast majority of their records even though they were under no legal obligation to release any records. Those who visit the Kennedy Library or the Ford Library or the Carter Library, for example, know the rich and valuable array of historical materials that are available. There is no fair or logical basis for presuming that former Presidents subject to the Presidential Records Act will exercise their constitutional and statutory authority to seek withholding of privileged records inappropriately or more aggressively than earlier Presidents -- from President Washington to President Carter -- exercised their plenary and far broader authority to withhold all records.

Some have asked what happens if a President asserts a privilege over a sensitive record. Can the requester challenge the privilege claim? The answer is yes. In that circumstance, the requester can challenge the privilege assertion in court, just as routinely occurs when ordinary Executive Branch records are withheld under exemptions to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA).

As to former Presidents who want to assert privilege, as they are constitutionally entitled to do, some have argued that the burden actually should be on the former President asserting privilege to file suit against the current President and Archivist to block release of records. That suggestion is neither constitutionally proper nor sound policy. It is both more appropriate and more sensible to require the requester who disagrees with a former President's privilege assertion to proceed to court -- just as the requester would do in ordinary FOIA litigation -- not to require the former President to take the extraordinary and jarring public step of, in effect, suing the current President.

For months, there have been skeptics who have bitterly -- and wrongly -- questioned President Bush's motives in establishing sensible procedures for the review of Presidential records. The President's order faithfully implements the requirements of the Constitution and the Presidential Records Act. Today's action authorizing the initial release of thousands of pages of otherwise privileged records from President Reagan's library shows that the skeptics were wrong and that President Bush's executive order can and will facilitate public release of Presidential records in a manner consistent with the Constitution and the Act.

So you think it would be inappropriate for us to talk to Bar Associations to find out exactly what they would be willing to coordinate and whether they would be willing to organize a "desk" of lawyers at the site? Could the Special Master's office do that?

Bill Called &A Breathtaking Intrusion⁸ On States, Control. The New York Times (12/19, Rothstein) notes, &The education bill written largely by the White House and given final Congressional approval by the Senate yesterday is a breathtaking intrusion of the federal government on states' control of education. For two decades, policy makers have wanted to make schools more accountable. Some states have developed creative ways of using tests to tackle that complex challenge; others have weaker systems. But the new legislation seems to impose on every state a Texas-type model that may actually retard sensible accountability in some places.⁸

By Alberto R. Gonzales

Recently President Bush signed an executive order to further implement the 1978 Presidential Records Act, the law that establishes a process for reviewing and releasing documents of former presidents. This order ensures expeditious disclosure of documents to provide historians, scholars and the public valuable insights into the way our government works.

Freedom and openness are at the core of our government. The president's order was crafted to provide as much information as possible to the public while also respecting the constitutional rights of former presidents.

For months skeptics have questioned President Bush's motives in establishing these sensible procedures. The order, they said, was an affront to open government and would put procedural roadblocks in the way of disclosure of important historical information. The critics were wrong.

Today, consistent with the president's order, the National Archives and Records Administration will inform the public that thousands of pages of records belonging to former president Reagan are available for release. These documents represent all that have been reviewed by the administration after receipt from the Reagan Library--and this is only one of what will be many routine releases of records belonging to former presidents, including otherwise privileged records.

Today's action shows that President Bush's executive order can and will work as intended--to facilitate appropriate and expeditious public release of presidential records consistent with the Constitution and the act.

At times, certain documents may still be so sensitive that they must remain confidential. In some cases, release of documents could jeopardize our national security, and while the pursuit of history is invaluable to our society, it should not endanger American lives. Nor should it deprive a president of candid advice while making crucial decisions.

Recognizing this, the Presidential Records Act expressly provides that former presidents retain the right to assert available privileges over their presidential records after the act's 12-year period of presumed non-disclosure expires. While the executive order says nothing about whether and under what circumstances a privilege should be asserted, it does recognize a role for former presidents.

Some have been critical of the order's inclusion of former presidents in this process, but former presidents have the right to assert executive privilege based on both Supreme Court precedent and the Presidential Records Act itself. The act would be deemed unconstitutional if it did not allow them to assert available privileges.

Before the act became law, former chief executives enjoyed complete control over their presidential records. But even without a legal requirement, former presidents have chosen to provide their papers for historical study.

President Bush expects that this tradition will continue. The value of presidential records and the principles of openness and access that their release represents are respected by him and are no doubt just as important to the former presidents whose papers will be subject to the Presidential Records Act.

There is no fair or logical basis for presuming that former presidents subject to the act will exercise their constitutional and statutory authority to seek withholding of privileged records more aggressively than have earlier presidents. We are confident that, over time, the vast majority of presidential records--including otherwise privileged records--will be made available to the public.

The executive order states that "absent compelling circumstances" the current president will defer to the decision of the former president to authorize release of records. This provision largely removes a sitting president as a potential impediment to release of a former president's records. Given that over time former presidents have authorized release of the vast majority of their records, it is clear President Bush intended the order to facilitate the expeditious release of such records.

If a former president should choose to assert privilege over a sensitive record, a requester may challenge the privilege claim in court. Such proceedings are routine when there is disagreement about the release of executive branch records under the Freedom of Information Act. Some have argued that the burden should lie with the former president in disputes over disclosure. But this would create the awkward situation of a former president's being forced to sue the current one--a suggestion that is neither constitutionally proper nor sound policy.

The writer is counsel to the president.

President Bush recently signed an Executive Order to further implement the 1978 Presidential Records Act, which establishes a process by which documents of former Presidents are reviewed and released. Freedom and openness lie at the core of our government, and President Bush's executive order ensures the expeditious disclosure of documents to provide historians, scholars and the public valuable insight into the way our government works. The order was crafted to provide as much information as possible to the public while also drawing upon sound legal policy to respecting the constitutional rights of former Presidents.

Consistent with ~~his~~the President's order, the President (?) has today authorized the National Archives and Records Administration ~~today has been authorized to~~ publicly release thousands of pages of records belonging to former President Reagan. These documents represent all that have been forwarded to the Administration thus far from the Reagan Library. This release, and is only one of what will be many routine releases of records belonging to former Presidents, including otherwise privileged records, following the clear steps in President Bush's new order.

Critics have irresponsibly alleged that the recent executive order was intended to prevent access to Presidential papers . Today's ~~This~~ release and the anticipated release of thousands of additional pages in the very near future demonstrate that the Bush administration is committed to the appropriate and expeditious public release of Presidential records, ~~despite allegations by critics that the recent executive order was intended to prevent access to Presidential papers.~~

~~At times, certain documents may still be so sensitive that it is necessary that they remain confidential. In some cases, documents could jeopardize our current national security, and while the pursuit of history is invaluable to our society, it should not jeopardize American lives. In such situations the current President and former Presidents may assert constitutionally based privileges over Presidential records. While the executive order says nothing about whether and under what circumstances a privilege may be asserted, it does recognize the role that former Presidents play. Some have been critical of the order's inclusion of former Presidents in this process, but former Presidents have the right to assert executive privilege based on Supreme Court precedent and the Presidential Records Act itself.~~

The Supreme Court, in its landmark 1977 Nixon v. GSA decision written by Justice William Brennan, definitively held that the Constitution guarantees former Presidents the right to assert privileges over their records. Additionally, the Presidential Records Act provides for the release of documents after 12 years from the end of the President's term, but expressly provides that former Presidents retain the right to assert available privileges over their Presidential records after the twelve year period expires. Indeed Thus, the Presidential Records Act would be ~~deemed~~ unconstitutional if it did not allow former Presidents to assert available privileges over their records.

Throughout history Presidents have taken steps over time to release the vast majority of their records. Before the Presidential Records Act was enacted, former Presidents enjoyed complete control over their Presidential records. Even without a legal requirement, former Presidents have chosen to provide their papers for historical study, and millions of people who have visited the Kennedy, Ford or Carter Libraries, for example, have taken advantage of the rich and valuable array of historical materials that have been made available.

President Bush expects that this tradition will continue. The value of Presidential records and the principles of openness and access that their release represents are respected by President Bush and are no doubt just as important to the former Presidents whose papers will be subject to the Presidential Records Act. There is no fair or logical basis for presuming that former Presidents subject to the Presidential Records Act will exercise their constitutional and statutory authority to seek withholding of privileged records more aggressively than earlier Presidents. We are confident that, over time, the vast majority of Presidential records -- including otherwise privileged records -- will be made available to the public as they should.

| By providing ~~A significant policy decision was made~~ that “absent compelling circumstances” the current President will defer to the decision of the former President to authorize release of records, ~~the order. This provision~~ largely removes a sitting President as a potential impediment to release of a former President’s records. When combined with the historical fact that former Presidents over time have authorized release of the vast majority of records, it is clear that President Bush’s ~~order intended to and the order and~~ will help facilitate the expeditious release of Presidential records.

If a former President should choose to assert privilege over a sensitive record, a requester may challenge the privilege claim in court. Such proceedings are routine when there is disagreement about the release of Executive Branch records under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). The argument that the burden should lie with the former President would require the awkward situation of a former President being forced to sue the current President. That suggestion is neither constitutionally proper nor sound policy. It is far more appropriate and sensible to require the requester who disagrees with the former President’s privilege assertion to proceed to court -- just as the requester would do in ordinary FOIA litigation.

For months, there have been skeptics who have wrongly questioned President Bush’s motives in establishing sensible procedures for the review of Presidential records. The President’s order faithfully implements the requirements of the Constitution and the Presidential Records Act. Today’s action authorizing the initial release of thousands of pages of privileged records from President Reagan’s library shows that the skeptics were wrong and that President Bush’s executive order can and will work as intended: to facilitate appropriate and expeditious public release of Presidential records consistent with the Constitution and the Act.

Terri -

Please see the attached op ed attached to Anne Womack's email.

The Judge would like for you to work up a letter to the editor of the Washington Post addressing the gubernatorial records. The Judge indicated that this letter needs to be written this week and would appreciate it if you would allow Brett Kavanaugh a chance to review your draft letter prior to submission to the Post. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Office of the Attorney General

28 CFR Part 104

CIV 104P; AG Order No.

RIN: 1105-AA79

September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001

ACTION: Interim final rule with request for comments.

SUMMARY: Shortly after the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, the President signed the "September 11 Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund") into law as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act") (the "Act"). The Act authorizes compensation to any individual (or the personal representative of a deceased individual) who was physically injured or killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes on that day. The Act provides that the Fund will be administered by a Special Master appointed by the Attorney General. On November 26, 2001, the Attorney General appointed Kenneth R. Feinberg as Special Master.

The Department of Justice, in consultation with the Special Master, is issuing certain procedural rules so the Special Master may commence operations of the program as soon as practicable. In order to allow the Special Master to begin distributing funds, the Department is issuing this rule as an "Interim Final Rule" that will have the force and effect of law immediately upon publication. This rule is designated "interim," however, because the Department is also seeking further comment for a period of 30 days as part of its further review and may expand or adjust aspects of the rule after receiving additional comments.

However, in order to assure that the families of needy victims receive adequate compensation, the regulations further provide that the Personal Representative shall, before payment is authorized, provide to the Special Master a plan for distribution of any award received from the Fund. Notwithstanding any other provision of these regulations or any other provision of state law, in the event that the Special Master concludes that the Personal Representative's plan for distribution does not appropriately compensate the victim's spouse, children, or other relatives, the Special Master may direct the Personal Representative to distribute all or part of the award to such spouse, children, or other relatives.

D. Advance Benefits

In order to comply with the Attorney General's November 26, 2001 instructions to the Special Master to pay benefits to eligible claimants as quickly as possible, these regulations permit claimants to seek immediate "Advance Benefits" in the fixed amount of $50,000 in the case of deceased individuals and $25,000 in the case of severely injured individuals who required hospitalization for one week or more.

To qualify for advance benefits, applicants must complete a short form (the "Eligibility Form") identifying basic eligibility and indicating that advance benefits would assist them in confronting current or immediate financial hardships. Such forms will be made available at claims intake centers as they are established, in response to telephone requests (888-714-3385, 202-305-1352, TDD: 888-560-0844), and on the Victims Compensation Fund website at www.usdoj.gov/victimcompensation.

Eligible claimants may apply for and receive advance benefits and then file their lengthier "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" at any time within the two-year time frame for filing claims under the program. This will allow needy eligible claimants to obtain prompt advance payments even though they may need more time to collect full information regarding the amount of compensation they seek. The 120-day period for determination of compensation will be stayed or tolled until the claimant files the completed "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" needed to allow the Special Master to determine the amount of the final award. However, once a claimant applies for Advance Benefits and is deemed eligible to recover under the Fund, the claimant will be deemed to have waived the right to file a civil action in state or federal court for damages sustained as a result of the September 11 attacks.

Advance benefits will be treated as advance payments on ultimate awards from the Fund. Thus, the amount of any advance benefits received will be deducted from the claimant's subsequent award.

E. Final awards made by the Fund.

Section 405(b) of the Act provides that the Special Master shall compensate eligible claimants based on the harm to the claimant (including both economic loss and noneconomic losses), the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant. The Act further provides that the Special Master shall determine the claimant's eligibility and the amount of compensation within 120 days.

The Special Master and the Department have studied the language of the Act, the varying public comments, evidence and data about the many victims of the September 11 attacks, and economic and demographic studies and data in fashioning the interim final rule. After this careful consideration, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that the following principal objectives should guide any determination of economic and noneconomic losses.

The first objective is that the process should be efficient, straightforward, and understandable to the claimants. This objective is based in part upon the statutory requirement that the Special Master review each claim and make an award determination within 120 days of filing. More important, however, is that claimants be able to enter the program -- or choose not to enter the program -- with an understanding of how their claims will be treated. This is especially important because the Act provides that, upon submission of a claim, a claimant waives the right to file a civil action for damages sustained as a result of the September 11 attacks. For claimants to make an informed decision regarding this waiver, they should have some understanding of how their award will be calculated and how much they would receive from the Fund should they decide to file a claim.

The second objective is that each claimant should, to the greatest extent possible, be treated fairly based on the claimant's own individual circumstances and relative to other claimants. While the circumstances of death for many victims will differ, those circumstances will in many cases be unknowable. In principle, similarly situated claimants should not receive dramatically differing treatment.

After careful consideration, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that, in order best to achieve these principal objectives, the Special Master should develop a methodology for calculating presumed economic and noneconomic losses that is based on readily identifiable individual circumstances for each claimant, such as age, prior income levels, marital status, and the number and ages of the victim's dependents. A methodology for determining presumed economic and noneconomic losses will also assist the Special Master in making fair and appropriate compensation determinations swiftly and efficiently within the time frame permitted by the Act.

In order to enable claimants to make informed decisions regarding whether to submit a claim under the Fund and, if so, whether to submit evidence of extraordinary individual circumstances that could justify departure from the presumed awards, the interim final rule directs the Special Master to publish schedules, tables, or charts of presumed determinations for economic and noneconomic losses. While these schedules, tables, or charts cannot cover every possible claimant (e.g., injured claimants), they are extensive and detailed enough to provide the majority of potential claimants with a general dollar range into which their awards may fall.

Nonetheless, the Special Master and the Department recognize that it will be impossible to fashion a presumptive methodology that will take into account all of the individual facts and circumstances for every claimant. Rather, some claimants may have extraordinary individual circumstances that justify departure from the presumed awards. Thus, the interim final rule provides that claimants may request that the Special Master depart from the presumed economic and noneconomic losses based upon a demonstration of extraordinary circumstances that the presumed award methodology does not adequately address.

Economic loss: Determination of economic loss requires a prediction about each claimant's future. This assessment will be, by its nature, somewhat speculative. While the determination of economic loss should be based upon facts regarding the individual victim where those facts are available, some facts cannot be predicted on an individualized basis.

The regulations also provide that the Special Master's schedules, tables, or charts should identify presumed determinations of economic loss up to a salary level commensurate with the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States. The Department recognizes that projecting earnings over worklife for people with extraordinary annual incomes is a very complex exercise, often requiring a detailed evaluation of variable and often complex formulae for nonvariable income, differing work life expectations, often highly volatile industries or markets, and other factors that are not often subject to easy generalization. We have also concluded that the purpose of the Act is not simply to examine economic and noneconomic harm, but also to provide compensation that is just and appropriate in light of the financial needs and resources of claimants. Any methodology that does nothing more than attempt to replicate a theoretically possible future income stream would lead to awards that would be insufficient relative to the needs of some victims' families, and excessive relative to the needs of others. Therefore, a claimant should not assume that he or she will receive an award greater than the presumed award simply because the victim had an income that exceeded the income for the 98th percentile. Indeed, the Act's requirement that the Special Master consider "the individual circumstances of the claimant" indicates that the Special Master may consider a particular claimant's financial needs and resources, just as the Department and the Special Master considered the needs of the claimants in concluding that no claimant bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim should receive less than $500,000 or $300,000 before collateral source offsets.

If a claimant seeks review of a presumed award, the Special Master may consider a range of information, including demographic information on retirement trends for high wage earners, the individual's historical expenses, savings, and any other factors he deems relevant, including economic trends, information available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Census Bureau and other entities on average income and retirement age for the victim's profession or even for the victim's former employer. Claimants should not expect awards grossly in excess of the highest awards listed on the Special Master's presumed award chart, as the individual circumstances of the wealthiest and highest-income claimants will often indicate that multi-million dollar awards out of the public coffers are not necessary to provide them with a strong economic foundation from which to rebuild their lives.

The Special Master and the Department recognize that the extent of physical injury for those victims who survived the September 11 attacks may vary to a degree that does not lend itself to a schedule, table, or chart. If the claimant's injury causes only a temporary disability, the Special Master may consider evidence regarding the length of time the claimant was absent from his employment in determining the appropriate compensation for economic loss. For those victims who suffered permanent physical disability, the Special Master may rely upon his economic loss methodology, but adjust the award based upon the extent of the physical disability. In evaluating claims of disability, the Special Master will, in general, make a determination regarding whether the claimant is capable of performing his or her usual profession in light of the injuries.

With respect to claims of total permanent disability, the Special Master may accept a determination of disability made by the Social Security Administration as evidence of disability without any further medical evidence or review. The Special Master may also consider determinations of permanent total disability made by other governmental agencies or private insurers in evaluating the claim. The Special Master may require an evaluation of the claimant's disability and ability to perform his or her occupation from medical experts.

With respect to claims of partial disability, the Special Master may consider evidence of the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to perform his or her usual occupation as well as the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to participate in usual daily activities.

Noneconomic losses: Each person who was killed or injured in the September 11 attacks suffered grievous harm, and each person experienced the unspeakable events of that day in a unique way. Some victims experienced terror for many minutes, as they were held hostage by terrorists on an airplane or trapped in a burning building. Some victims had no warning of what was coming and died within seconds of a plane hitting the building in which they worked. While these circumstances may be knowable in a few extraordinary circumstances, for the vast majority of victims these circumstances are unknowable.

After extensive fact finding, public outreach, and review of public comments, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that the most rational and just way to approach the imponderable task of placing a dollar amount upon the pain, emotional suffering, loss of enjoyment of life, and mental anguish suffered by the thousands of victims of the September 11 attacks is to assess the noneconomic losses for categories of claimants. The most obvious distinction is between those who died and those who suffered physical injury but survived.

The regulations therefore set a presumed award for noneconomic losses sustained. For those victims who died as a result of the September 11 aircraft crashes, the presumed noneconomic losses will be $250,000, plus an additional $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent of the deceased victim. That $250,000 figure is roughly equivalent to the amounts received under existing federal programs by public safety officers who are killed while on duty, or members of our military who are killed in the line of duty while serving our nation. See 38 U.S.C. § 1967 (military personnel); 42 U.S.C. § 3796 (Public Safety Officers Benefit Program). The latter figures -- $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent -- include a noneconomic component of "replacement services loss."

For those victims who suffered physical injury but survived the September 11 attacks, the Special Master may establish a methodology for estimating their noneconomic losses. The Special Master may determine that it is appropriate to give some percentage of the noneconomic loss award given for victims who died, based upon the extent of the injury.

The Special Master and the Department recognize, however, that no presumed award can take into account all of the unique individual circumstances of each claimant. Accordingly, as noted above, claimants may either accept the presumed award or instead attempt to demonstrate in a hearing before the Special Master extraordinary circumstances that justify departure from the presumed award.

Collateral Sources: Section 405(b)(6) of the Act provides that the Special Master shall

reduce the amount of compensation by the amount of the collateral source compensation "a claimant has received or is entitled to receive" as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. The interim final rule provides that collateral sources will include life insurance, pension funds, death benefit programs, and payments by federal, state, or local governments related to the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. While many public commenters voiced strong opposition to the inclusion of some or all of these as collateral source compensation, the Act expressly includes each one within the definition of "collateral sources."

At the same time, the Act does not address whether certain other types of payments constitute collateral source compensation. The interim final rule provides that the following are not collateral source compensation:

(1) The value of services or in-kind charitable gifts such as provision of emergency housing, food, or clothing; and

(2) Charitable donations distributed to the beneficiaries of the decedent, to the injured claimant, or to the beneficiaries of the injured claimant by private charitable entities; provided, however, that the Special Master may determine that funds provided to victims or their families through a private charitable entity constitute, in substance, a collateral source as described above.

The Department has concluded that charitable contributions should not be considered collateral source compensation within the meaning of the Act because, among other reasons, such charitable contributions are different in kind from the collateral sources listed in the Act. Moreover, because the collateral offset only applies to collateral source compensation that the claimant has received or is entitled to receive, deducting charitable awards from the amount of compensation would have the perverse effect of encouraging potential donors to withhold their giving until after claimants have received their awards from the Fund.

F. The claims evaluation process.

Section 405(b)(4) of the Act provides that a claimant, after the filing of the claim, has the right to present evidence to the Office of the Special Master. The statute specifically provides that the claimant has the right to present witness statements and documents, the right to obtain legal counsel, and such other due process rights as are determined to be appropriate by the Special Master.

The interim final regulations provide claimants with a choice of two Procedural Options -- Track A or Track B. If a claimant selects Track A, the Claims Evaluator will determine eligibility and the claimant's presumed award and, within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination, the amount of the presumed award, and the right to request a hearing before the Special Master or his designee under § 104.33 of these regulations. After an eligible claimant has been notified of the presumed award, the claimant may either accept the presumed compensation determination as the final determination and request payment, or may instead request a review before the Special Master or his designee pursuant to § 104.33. If a claimant opts for a review, the claimant may make supplemental submissions. The Special Master may alter or modify the award if the presumed award was calculated erroneously, or if the claimant demonstrates extraordinary circumstances indicating that the presumed award does not adequately address the claimant's injury. There will be no further review or appeal from this determination.

If the claimant selects Track B, a Claims Evaluator will determine eligibility within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, but shall not determine the claimant's presumed award. The Claims Evaluator will then notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination. Upon notification of eligibility, the claimant will proceed to a hearing pursuant to § 104.33. At such hearing, the Special Master or his designee will utilize the presumed award methodology, but may modify or vary the award if the claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumed award methodology. There shall be no review or appeal from this determination.

Hearings, when sought, will be held by the Special Master or his designee. These hearings shall be conducted in a nonadversarial manner, the objective of which will be to permit the claimant to present information or evidence that the claimant believes is necessary to a full understanding of the claim. Claimants will be permitted, but not required, to present witnesses, including expert witnesses. The hearing officer shall be permitted to examine the credentials of experts.

The hearings shall be limited in length to a time period determined by the Special Master or the relevant hearing officer, but generally not to exceed two hours. The hearings shall, to the extent practicable, be scheduled at times and in locations convenient to the claimant or his or her representative. The claimant shall be entitled to be represented by an attorney in good standing, but it is not necessary that the claimant be represented by an attorney.

G. Assistance to claimants.

In its November 5, 2001 Notice of Inquiry, the Department noted that section 405(a) of the Act establishes some specific requirements with respect to the claim form and the information to be included. The law requires the Special Master to develop a claim form to use in filing claims for compensation under this program. The Special Master is to ensure that the form can be filed electronically if it is determined to be practicable. Moreover, by law, the form must include a statement of the factual basis for eligibility and information regarding income in recent years. In addition, the form is to request information from the claimant as to: (1) the physical harm suffered by a victim, or information confirming the death of the victim, as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001; (2) income tax returns for recent years and other records; and (3) documentation regarding collateral source compensation including life insurance policies and government or employment-related programs which have or may provide funds or benefits to the claimant.

The Department believes that it is important that this Fund be accessible to potential claimants who have limited resources and who are not trained in the law. Rather than attempt to address in detail the means by which the Special Master should provide assistance to claimants, these regulations leave the Special Master with discretion to implement steps to provide assistance to claimants and to make this Fund accessible to them.

Because the Act does not provide for payment of legal or other fees by the Fund, these regulations do not impose any limits on the types or amount of fees that claimants may pay their attorneys or others providing assistance. Although the Department's regulations do not set specific limits on attorneys fees separate from those existing in state law or attorney ethical standards, the Department believes that contingency arrangements exceeding 5% of a claimant's recovery from the Fund would not be in the best interest of the claimants.

The Department contemplates that the Special Master will have discretion to inform potential claimants of the nature of the Fund so that they may make informed decisions regarding the types or amount of fees that they pay for legal or other assistance. For example, the Special Master may notify claimants and potential claimants of the availability of free legal services. Likewise, the Special Master may inform claimants and potential claimants that the Fund is a no-fault, administrative scheme that should not involve the kind of risks and expense that would justify any significant contingency fees.

These regulations similarly do not address the manner in which claimants may use funds that they receive from the Fund, except that the Personal Representatives must agree in an acknowledgment and release form to distribute the award to the beneficiaries of the decedent in accordance with the decedent's will or applicable state law or ruling by a court of competent jurisdiction. While the Department does not believe that it is appropriate for the Special Master to place further legal restrictions on the claimants' or beneficiaries' use of payments from the Fund, the Department does contemplate that the Special Master will have discretion to provide claimants with information regarding annuities or other financial planning devices or to offer structured awards with periodic payments.

Application of various laws and Executive Orders to this rulemaking.

Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. 553

This rule provides for compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured and to the personal representatives of those who were killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. In order to provide compensation to eligible claimants as expeditiously as possible, Congress set a short 90-day deadline for the issuance of these regulations. The Department did seek public input on the issues, but it was not possible for the Department to prepare and publish a proposed rule for notice and comment within that very short time period.

The APA provides that an agency need not go through proposed rulemaking and comment before issuing rules to implement benefits programs. 5 U.S.C. 553(a)(2). Moreover, the Department, in consultation with the Special Master, determined that taking the time to draft and publish a proposed rule for notice and comment before this rule took effect would have been impracticable in light of the short time between the enactment of the statute and the deadline for rulemaking, and also would have been contrary to the public interest, which strongly favors prompt disbursement of benefits. Accordingly, the Department has determined that there is "good cause" for exempting this rule from the provision of the Administrative Procedure Act that requires a notice of proposed rulemaking and the opportunity for public comment. 5 U.S.C. 553(b)(B).

For the same reasons, the Department also finds "good cause" for exempting this rule from the provision of the Administrative Procedure Act providing for a delayed effective date. 5 U.S.C. 553(d). Delaying the opportunity for eligible claimants to seek Advance Benefits or to file claims under the Act would be contrary to the public interest.

Congressional Review Act

The Administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs of the Office of Management and Budget has designated this interim final rule as a "major rule" as that term is defined by the Congressional Review Act ("CRA"), 5 U.S.C. 801 et. seq. Pursuant to section 808(2) of the CRA, the Department finds that "good cause" exists for establishing an effective date for this rule upon publication because delay would be impracticable in light of the short time between the enactment of the statute and the deadline for rulemaking, and also would be contrary to the public interest favoring prompt disbursement of benefits.

Privacy Act of 1974

The Department of Justice, Civil Division is establishing a new Privacy Act system of records entitled "September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001, JUSTICE/CIV-008." By law, regulations addressing certain administrative matters for the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 must be issued within the 90-day period established by Congress. The Privacy Act notice will be published with no routine uses, so that it will be effective on the date published. It is likely that amendments to this notice, including routine uses, will be published at a later date, with the opportunity to comment. In the interim, disclosures necessary to process claims will be made only with the written consent of claimants or as otherwise authorized under 5 U.S.C. 552a(b).

Regulatory Flexibility Act

These regulations set forth procedures by which the Federal government will award compensation benefits to eligible victims of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. Under 5 U.S.C. 601(6), the term "small entity" does not include the Federal government, the party charged with incurring the costs attendant to the implementation and administration of the Victims Compensation Fund. To the extent that small entities, including small government entities, will be economically affected by the promulgation of these regulations, such effects will likely be minimal. Further, the number of entities that will be affected will, in all probability, fall short of a "substantial number" of small entities. In fact, the Department believes that the promulgation of these rules will play a considerable role in reducing the amount of complex, private litigation, wherein a substantial number of small (and large) entities would undoubtedly be significantly impacted.

Accordingly, the Department has reviewed this rule in accordance with the Regulatory Flexibility Act (5 U.S.C. 605(b)) and by approving it certifies that this rule will not have a significant economic impact on a substantial number of small entities because it provides compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and compensation through a "personal representative" for those who were killed as a result of those crashes. This rule provides compensation to individuals, not to entities.

Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995

This rule will not result in the expenditure by State, local and tribal governments, in the aggregate, or by the private sector, of $100,000,000 or more in any one year, and it will not significantly or uniquely affect small governments. Therefore, no actions were deemed necessary under the provisions of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995.

Executive Order 12866 - Regulatory Planning and Review

This regulation has been drafted and reviewed in accordance with Executive Order 12866, "Regulatory Planning and Review," section 1(b), Principles of Regulation. The Department of Justice has determined that this rule is a "significant regulatory action" under Executive Order 12866, section 3(f), Regulatory Planning and Review, and accordingly this rule has been reviewed by the Office of Management and Budget.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Statement by the Special Master

The September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 is an unprecedented expression of compassion on the part of the American people to the victims and their families devastated by the horror and tragedy of September 11. The Act itself (specifically Title IV – Victim Compensation), and the attached regulations drafted and implemented pursuant to the Act, are designed to bring some measure of financial relief to those most devastated by the events of

Executive Order 13132 - Federalism

This regulation will not have substantial direct effects on the States, on the relationship between the national government and the States, or on distribution of power and responsibilities among the various levels of government. Therefore, in accordance with Executive Order 13132, it is determined that this rule does not have sufficient federalism implications to warrant the preparation of a Federalism Assessment. However, the Department of Justice has worked cooperatively with state and local officials in the affected communities in the preparation of this rule. Also, the Department individually notified national associations representing elected officials of the initial request for comment and will be taking similar action in connection with the interim final rule.

Subpart A - General; Eligibility

This part implements the provisions of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001, Title IV of Public Law 107-42, 115 Stat. 230 (Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act) to provide compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and to the "personal representatives" of those who were killed as a result of the crashes. All compensation provided through the Fund will be on account of personal physical injuries or death.

§ 104.2 Eligibility definitions and requirements.

(a) Eligible claimants. The term eligible claimants means:

(1) Individuals present at the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site at the time of or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes and who suffered physical harm, as defined herein, as a direct result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes;

(2) The Personal Representatives of deceased individuals aboard American Airlines flights 11 or 77 and United Airlines flights 93 or 175; and

(3) The Personal Representatives of individuals who were present at the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site at the time of or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes and who died as a direct result of the terrorist-related aircraft crash.

(4) The term eligible claimants does not include any individual or representative of an individual who is identified to have been a participant or conspirator in the terrorist-related crashes of September 11.

(b) Immediate aftermath. The term immediate aftermath of the crashes shall mean, for purposes of all claimants other than rescue workers, the period of time from the crashes until 12 hours after the crashes. With respect to rescue workers who assisted in efforts to search for and recover victims, the immediate aftermath shall include the period from the crashes until 96 hours after the crashes.

(c) Physical harm.

(1) The term physical harm shall mean a physical injury to the body that was treated by a medical professional within 24 hours of the injury having been sustained or within 24 hours of rescue; and

(i) Required hospitalization as an in-patient for at least 24 hours; or

(ii) Caused, either temporarily or permanently, partial or total physical disability, incapacity or disfigurement.

(2) In every case not involving death, the physical injury must be verified by contemporaneous medical records created by or at the direction of the medical professional who provided the medical care.

(d) Personal Representative. The term Personal Representative shall mean the person determined to be the Personal Representative under § 104.4 of this part.

(e) Present at the site. The term present at the site (i.e., the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site) shall mean physically present at the time of the crashes or in the immediate aftermath:

(1) In the buildings or portions of buildings that were destroyed as a result of the airplane crashes; or

(2) In any area contiguous to the crash sites that the Special Master determines was sufficiently close to the site that there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm resulting from the impact of the aircraft or any subsequent fire, explosions, or building collapses (generally, the immediate area in which the impact occurred, fire occurred, portions of buildings fell, or debris fell upon and injured persons).

§ 104.3 Other definitions.

(a) Beneficiary. The term beneficiary shall mean a person entitled under the laws of the decedent's domicile to receive payments or benefits from the estate of or on behalf of the decedent on whose behalf the claim to the Fund was filed.

(b) Dependents. The Special Master shall identify as dependents those persons so identified by the victim on his or her federal tax return for the year 2000 unless:

(1) The claimant demonstrates that a minor child of the victim was born or adopted on or after January 1, 2001;

(2) Another person became a dependent in accordance with then-applicable law on or after January 1, 2001; or

(3) The victim was not required by law to file a federal income tax return for the year 2000.

(c) Spouse. The Special Master shall identify as the spouse of a victim the person reported as spouse on the victim's federal tax return for the year 2000 unless:

(1) The victim was married or divorced in accordance with applicable state law on or after January 1, 2001; or

(2) The victim was not required by law to file a federal income tax return for the year 2000.

(d) The Act. The Act, as used in this part, shall mean Public Law 107-42, 115 Stat. 230 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act"), 49 U.S.C. 40101 note.

(e) Victim. The term victim shall mean an eligible injured claimant or a decedent on whose behalf a claim is brought by an eligible Personal Representative.

§ 104.4 Personal Representative.

(a) In general. The Personal Representative shall be:

(1) An individual appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction as the Personal Representative of the decedent or as the executor or administrator of the decedent's will or estate.

(2) In the event that no Personal Representative or executor or administrator has been appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction, and such issue is not the subject of pending litigation or other dispute, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative for purposes of compensation by the Fund is the person named by the decedent in the decedent's will as the executor or administrator of the decedent's estate. In the event no will exists, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative for purposes of compensation by the Fund is the first person in the line of succession established by the laws of the decedent's domicile governing intestacy.

(b) Notice to beneficiaries. Any purported Personal Representative must, before filing an Eligibility Form, provide written notice of the claim (including a designated portion of the Eligibility Form) to the immediate family of the decedent (including, but not limited to, the decedent's spouse, former spouses, children, other dependents, and parents), to the executor, administrator, and beneficiaries of the decedent's will, and to any other persons who may reasonably be expected to assert an interest in an award or to have a cause of action to recover damages relating to the wrongful death of the decedent. Personal delivery or transmission by certified mail, return receipt requested, shall be deemed sufficient notice under this provision. The claim forms shall require that the purported Personal Representative certify that such notice (or other notice that the Special Master deems appropriate) has been given. In addition, as provided in § 104.21(b)(5) of this part, the Special Master may publish a list of individuals who have filed Eligibility Forms and the names of the victims for whom compensation is sought, but shall not publish the content of any such form.

(c) Objections to Personal Representatives. Objections to the authority of an individual to file as the Personal Representative of a decedent may be filed with the Special Master by parties who assert a financial interest in the award up to 30 days following the filing by the Personal Representative. If timely filed, such objections shall be treated as evidence of a "dispute" pursuant to paragraph (d) of this section.

(d) Disputes as to identity. The Special Master shall not be required to arbitrate, litigate, or otherwise resolve any dispute as to the identity of the Personal Representative. In the event of a dispute over the appropriate Personal Representative, the Special Master may suspend

adjudication of the claim or, if sufficient information is provided, calculate the appropriate award and authorize payment, but place in escrow any payment until the dispute is resolved either by agreement of the disputing parties or by a court of competent jurisdiction. Alternatively, the disputing parties may agree in writing to the identity of a Personal Representative to act on their behalf, who may seek and accept payment from the Fund while the disputing parties work to settle their dispute.

§ 104.5 Foreign claims.

In the case of claims brought by or on behalf of foreign citizens, the Special Master may alter the requirements for documentation set forth herein to the extent such materials are unavailable to such foreign claimants.

§ 104.6 Amendments to this rule.

In the event that amendments are subsequently made to any section of this Part, claimants are entitled to have their claims processed in accordance with the provisions that were in effect at the time that their claims were submitted under § 104.21(d).

Subpart B - Filing for Compensation; Application for Advance Benefits

§ 104.21 Filing for compensation.

(a) Compensation form; "filing." Except for applications for Advance Benefits pursuant to § 104.22, no claim may be considered until the claimant has submitted both an "Eligibility Form" and either a "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or a "Death Compensation Form." A claim shall be deemed "filed" for purposes of section 405(b)(3) of the Act (providing that the Special Master shall issue a determination not later than 120 days after the date on which a claim is filed), and for any time periods in this part, when a Claims Evaluator determines that both the Eligibility Form and either a Personal Injury Compensation Form or a Death Compensation Form are substantially complete. Provided, however, that if a claimant files an Eligibility Form requesting Advance Benefits pursuant to § 104.22 of this part without filing either a "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or a "Death Compensation Form," the claim shall be deemed "filed" when the Claims Evaluator determines that the Eligibility Form is substantially complete, but the time period for determination and any time periods in this part shall be stayed or tolled as described in § 104.22(g) of this part.

(b) Eligibility Form. The Special Master shall develop an Eligibility Form that will require the claimant to provide information necessary for determining the claimant's eligibility to recover from the Fund.

(1) The Eligibility Form may require that the claimant certify that he or she has dismissed any pending lawsuit seeking damages as a result of the terrorist-related airplane crashes of September 11, 2001 (except for actions seeking collateral source benefits) within 90 days of the effective date of this part pursuant to section 405(c)(3)(B)(ii) of the Act and that there is no pending lawsuit brought by a dependent, spouse, or beneficiary of the victim.

(2) The Special Master may require as part of the notice requirement pursuant to § 104.4(b) that the claimant provide copies of a designated portion of the Eligibility Form to the immediate family of the decedent (including, but not limited to, the spouse, former spouses, children, other dependents, and parents), to the executor, administrator, and beneficiaries of the decedent's will, and to any other persons who may reasonably be expected to assert an interest in an award or to have a cause of action to recover damages relating to the wrongful death of the decedent.

(3) The Eligibility Form may require claimants to provide the following proof:

(i) Proof of death: Death certificate or similar official documentation;

(ii) Proof of presence at site: Documentation sufficient to establish presence at one of the crash sites, which may include, without limitation, a death certificate, records of employment, contemporaneous medical records, contemporaneous records of federal, state, city or local government, an affidavit or declaration of the decedent's or injured claimant's employer, or other sworn statement (or unsworn statement complying with 28 U.S.C. 1746) regarding the presence of the victim;

(iii) Proof of death on board aircraft: Death certificate or records of American or United Airlines or other sufficient official documentation;

(iv) Proof of physical harm: Contemporaneous medical records of hospitals, clinics, physicians, licensed medical personnel, or registries maintained by federal, state, or local government, and records of all continuing medical treatment;

(v) Personal Representative: Copies of relevant legal documentation, including court orders; letters testamentary or similar documentation; proof of the purported Personal Representative's relationship to the decedent; copies of wills, trusts, or other testamentary documents; and information regarding other possible beneficiaries as requested by the Eligibility Form;

(vi) Any other information that the Special Master deems necessary to determine the claimant's eligibility.

(4) The Special Master may also require waivers, consents, or authorizations from claimants to obtain directly from third parties tax returns, medical information, employment information, or other information that the Special Master deems relevant in determining the claimant's eligibility or award, and may request an opportunity to review originals of documents submitted in connection with the Fund.

(5) Application for Advance Benefits: The Eligibility Form shall include a section allowing claimants to indicate that they wish to apply for Advance Benefits. Claimants who apply for such Advance Benefits must certify on that Form that they have not yet received $450,000 in collateral source compensation if they are bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim with a spouse or dependent, $250,000 in collateral source compensation if they are bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim who was single with no dependents, or an amount in excess of their lost wages plus out-of-pocket medical expenses if they are an injured claimant. All such claimants also must state on the Form facts establishing financial hardship that would justify a determination that they are in need of Advance Benefits.

(6) The Special Master may publish a list of individuals who have filed Eligibility Forms and the names of the victims for whom compensation is sought, but shall not publish the content of any such form.

(c) Personal Injury Compensation Form and Death Compensation Form. The Special Master shall develop a Personal Injury Compensation Form that each injured claimant must submit. The Special Master shall also develop a Death Compensation Form that each Personal Representative must submit. These forms shall require the claimant to provide certain information that the Special Master deems necessary to determining the amount of any award, including information concerning income, collateral sources, benefits, and other financial information, and shall require the claimant to state the factual basis for the amount of compensation sought. It shall also allow the claimant to submit certain other information that may be relevant, but not necessary, to the determination of the amount of any award.

(1) Claimants shall, at a minimum, submit all tax returns that were filed for the years 1998, 1999, and 2000. The Special Master may, at his discretion, require that claimants submit copies of tax returns or other records for any other period of years he deems appropriate for determination of an award. The Special Master may also require waivers, consents, or authorizations from claimants to obtain directly from third parties medical information, employment information, or other information that the Special Master deems relevant to determining the amount of any award.

(2) Claimants may attach to the "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" any additional statements, documents or analyses by physicians, experts,

September 11. In one important sense, the Fund symbolizes the commitment of the American people to those most in need. It is an example of how Americans rally around the less fortunate.

The attached regulations have two objectives: (1) to provide fair, predictable and consistent compensation to the victims of September 11 and their families throughout the life of the program; and (2) to do so in an expedited, efficient manner without unnecessary bureaucracy and needless demands on the victims. The regulations highlight a fast track administrative compensation program, eliminating the red tape, time and expense of a traditional lawsuit. Quick payment to eligible claimants characterizes this program.

The Fund offers the eligible claimant an alternative to litigation. To succeed in the courtroom, a victim of the September 11 tragedy, or his or her representative, would be compelled to litigate, probably for many years at excessive cost, and with all the uncertainty of result which is part of the litigation process. Among the hazards of such a court proceeding are: Would liability be demonstrated? Against whom? Would sufficient funds be available to pay in full any resulting tort award? Would the verdict, even if favorable, withstand appellate challenge?

Trade-offs are required in developing Fund procedures that are different than those in the more conventional lawsuit. It is possible to develop an alternative administrative scheme, providing speedy and efficient compensation, which will help bring some closure to the events of September 11. We should not require its victims to revisit the tragic events of September 11 over and over again during the pendency of a lawsuit in our courts.

In formulating the regulations, we heeded the instruction of the Attorney General to help the neediest of victims as quickly as possible. Accordingly, under these regulations, an eligible claimant can receive an immediate advance payment of $50,000 in cases involving death, or $25,000 in certain cases involving serious physical injury. These payments are downpayments only, advanced to provide immediate financial assistance to those in need.

advisors, or any other person or entity that the claimant believes may be relevant to a determination of compensation.

(d) Submission of a claim. Section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act provides that upon the submission of a claim under the Fund, the claimant waives the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any Federal or State court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for civil actions to recover collateral source obligations. A claim shall be deemed submitted for purposes of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act when the claim is deemed filed pursuant to § 104.21, regardless of whether any time limits are stayed or tolled.

(e) Provisions of information by third parties. Any third party having an interest in a claim brought by a Personal Representative may provide written statements or information regarding the Personal Representative's claim. The Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee may, at his or her discretion, include the written statements or information as part of the claim.

§ 104.22 Advance Benefits.

(a) Advance Benefits. Eligible Claimants may apply for immediate "Advance Benefits" in a fixed amount as follows:

- (1) $50,000 for Personal Representatives; and
- (2) $25,000 for injured claimants who meet the requirements of paragraph (d) of this section.

(b) Credit against award. The Advance Benefit shall be credited against any final compensation award so that the amount of the Advance Benefit is deducted from the final award under this program.

(c) Application for Advance Benefits. An otherwise eligible claimant may seek Advance Benefits to alleviate financial hardship faced by the claimant (or financial hardship faced by the beneficiaries of the decedent) by submitting an Eligibility Form described in § 104.21(b) and indicating thereon that he or she is applying for Advance Benefits.

(d) Eligibility for Advance Benefits. In the case of a Personal Representative, the claimant may be deemed eligible for Advance Benefits if a Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee determines that the claimant is eligible to recover under the Fund. In the case of an injured claimant, the claimant may be deemed eligible for Advance Benefits when the Special Master or his designee determines that the claimant is eligible to recover under the Fund and that the claimant's physical injury required hospitalization for one week or more.

(e) Authorization of payments.

(1) Payment in the amount described in paragraph (a) of this section will be authorized immediately upon a determination that the claimant is eligible for Advance Benefits and the claimant is:

(i) An injured claimant;

(ii) A Personal Representative who was the spouse of the deceased victim on September 11, 2001; or

(iii) A Personal Representative who has obtained the consent of the spouse of the deceased victim (or, if there is no surviving spouse, all of the dependents of the deceased victim) to file for Advance Benefits.

(2) (i) With respect to other Personal Representatives, payment will be authorized within 15 days after the determination that the claimant is eligible for Advance Benefits, provided that no other individual has asserted a colorable conflicting claim as the Personal Representative with respect to the decedent and the Personal Representative identifies and has given notice to the beneficiaries to whom such Advance Benefits will be distributed.

(ii) In the event that a colorable conflicting claim has been asserted, no Advance Benefit will be paid until a final eligibility determination has been made.

(f) Waiver of the right to sue. As set forth in § 104.21(d) of this part, a claim shall be deemed submitted for purposes of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act when a claimant has filed an Eligibility Form and is determined by a Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee to be an eligible claimant. The claimant will therefore have waived the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any Federal or State Court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for civil actions to recover collateral source obligations.

(g) Tolling of 120-day clock and other time periods. A claimant filing an Eligibility Form requesting Advance Benefits before filing a Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form will be deemed to have waived his right to commencement of the 120-day period in section 405(b)(3) of the Act (providing that the Special Master shall provide notice to the claimant of his determination within 120 days after the date on which a claim is filed). The 120-day period and all other time limitations in this part, except those applicable to Advance Benefit payments, shall be stayed or tolled until such time that a Claims Evaluator determines that the claimant's Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form is substantially complete.

Subpart C - Claim Intake, Assistance, and Review Procedures

§ 104.31 Procedure for claims evaluation.

(a) Initial review. Claims Evaluators shall review the forms filed by the claimant and either deem the claim "filed" (pursuant to 104.21(a)) or notify the claimant of any deficiency in the forms or any required documents.

(b) Procedural tracks. Each claim will be placed on a procedural track, described herein as "Track A" and "Track B," selected by the claimant on the Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form.

(1) Procedure for Track A. The Claims Evaluator shall determine eligibility and the claimant's presumed award pursuant to §§ 104.43 to 104.46 of this part and, within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination, the amount of the presumed award, and the right to request a hearing before the Special Master or his designee under § 104.33 of this part. After an eligible claimant has been notified of the presumed award, the claimant may either accept the presumed compensation determination as the final determination and request payment, or may instead request a review before the Special Master or his designee pursuant to § 104.33. Claimants found to be ineligible may appeal pursuant to § 104.32.

(2) Procedure for Track B. The Claims Evaluator shall determine eligibility within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, but shall not determine the claimant's presumed award; the Claims Evaluator shall notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination. Upon notification of eligibility, the claimant will proceed to a hearing pursuant to § 104.33. At such hearing, the Special Master or his designee shall utilize the presumptive award methodology as set forth in §§ 104.43 to 104.46 of this part, but may modify or vary the award if the claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award methodology. There shall be no review or appeal from this determination.

(c) Multiple claims from the same family. The Special Master may treat claims brought by or on behalf of two or more members of the same immediate family as related or consolidated claims for purposes of determining the amount of any award.

§ 104.32 Eligibility review.

Any claimant deemed ineligible by the Claims Evaluator may appeal that decision to the Special Master or his designee by filing an eligibility appeal on forms created by the office of the Special Master.

(a) Supplemental submissions. The claimant may prepare and file Supplemental Submissions within 21 calendar days from notification of either the presumed award (Track A) or eligibility (Track B). The Special Master shall develop forms appropriate for Supplemental Submissions.

(b) Conduct of hearings. Hearings shall be before the Special Master or his designee. The objective of hearings shall be to permit the claimant to present information or evidence that the claimant believes is necessary to a full understanding of the claim. The claimant may request that the Special Master or his designee review any evidence relevant to the determination of the award, including without limitation: factors and variables used in calculating economic loss; the identity of the victim's spouse and dependents; the financial needs of the claimant; facts affecting noneconomic loss; and any factual or legal arguments that the claimant contends should affect the award. Claimants shall be entitled to submit any statements or reports in writing. The Special Master or his designee may require authentication of documents, including medical records and reports, and may request and consider information regarding the financial resources and expenses of the victim's family or other material that the Special Master or his designee deems relevant.

(c) Location and duration of hearings. The hearings shall, to the extent practicable, be scheduled at times and in locations convenient to the claimant or his or her representative. The hearings shall be limited in length to a time period determined by the Special Master or his designee, but generally not to exceed two hours. The claimant may elect whether the hearing shall be public or private.

(d) Witnesses, counsel, and experts. Claimants shall be permitted, but not required, to present witnesses, including expert witnesses. The Special Master or his designee shall be permitted to question witnesses and examine the credentials of experts. The claimant shall be entitled to be represented by an attorney in good standing, but it is not necessary that the claimant be represented by an attorney.

(e) Waivers. The Special Master shall have authority and discretion to require any waivers necessary to obtain more individualized information on specific claimants.

(f) Track A review of presumed award. For proceedings under Track A, the Special Master or his designee shall make a determination whether:

(1) There was an error in determining the presumptive award, either because the claimant's individual criteria were misapplied or for another reason; or

(2) The claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award.

(g) Determination. The Special Master shall notify the claimant in writing of the final amount of the award, but need not create or provide any written record of the deliberations that resulted in that determination. There shall be no further review or appeal of the Special Master's determination.

§ 104.34 Publication of awards.

In order to assist potential claimants in evaluating their options of either filing a claim with the Special Master or filing a lawsuit in tort, the Special Master reserves the right to publicize the amounts of some or all of the awards, but shall not publish the name of the claimants or victims that received each award. If published, these decisions would be intended by the Special Master as general guides for potential claimants and should not be viewed as precedent binding on the Special Master or his staff.

§ 104.35 Claims deemed abandoned by claimants.

The Special Master and his staff will endeavor to evaluate promptly any information submitted by claimants. Nonetheless, it is the responsibility of the claimant to keep the Special Master informed of his or her current address and to respond within the duration of this two-year program to requests for additional information. Claims outstanding at the end of this program because of a claimant's failure to complete his or her filings shall be deemed abandoned.

§ 104.41. Amount of compensation.

As provided in section 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) of the Act, in determining the amount of compensation to which a claimant is entitled, the Special Master shall take into consideration the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant. The individual circumstances of the claimant may include the financial needs or financial resources of the claimant or the victim's dependents and beneficiaries. As provided in section 405(b)(6) of the Act, the Special Master shall reduce the amount of compensation by the amount of collateral source compensation the claimant (or, in the case of a Personal Representative, the victim's beneficiaries) has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. In no event shall an award (before collateral source compensation has been deducted) be less than $500,000 in any case brought on behalf of a deceased victim with a spouse or dependent, or $300,000 in any case brought on behalf of a deceased victim who was single with no dependents.

§ 104.42. Applicable state law.

The phrase "to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable state law," as used in the statute's definition of economic loss in section 402(5) of the Act, is interpreted to mean that the Special Master is not permitted to compensate claimants for those categories or types of economic losses that would not be compensable under the law of the state that would be applicable to any tort claims brought by or on behalf of the victim.

§ 104.43 Determination of presumed economic loss for decedents.

In reaching presumed determinations for economic loss for Personal Representatives bringing claims on behalf of decedents, the Special Master shall consider sums corresponding to the following:

- (a) Loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment. The Special Master, as part of the process of reaching a "determination" pursuant to section 405(b) of the Act, shall develop a methodology and publish schedules, tables, or charts that will permit prospective claimants to estimate determinations of loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment based upon individual circumstances of the deceased victim, including: the age of the decedent as of September 11, 2001; the number of dependents who survive the decedent; whether the decedent is survived by a spouse; and the amount and nature of the decedent's income for recent years. The decedent's salary/income in 1998-2000 shall be evaluated in a manner that the Special Master deems appropriate. The Special Master may, if he deems appropriate, take an average of income figures for each of those three years. The Special Master's methodology and schedules, tables, or charts shall yield presumed determinations of loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment for annual incomes up to but not beyond the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States for the year 2000. In cases where the victim was a minor child, the Special Master may assume an average income for the child commensurate with the average income of all wage earners in the United States.

(b) Medical expense loss. This loss equals the out-of-pocket medical expenses that were incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that were not paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). This loss shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the Personal Representative.

(c) Replacement services loss. For decedents who did not have any prior earned income, or who worked only part time outside the home, economic loss may be determined with reference to replacement services and similar measures.

(d) Loss due to death/burial costs. This loss shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the personal representative and includes the out-of-pocket burial costs that were incurred.

(e) Loss of business or employment opportunities. Such losses shall be addressed through the procedure outlined above in paragraph (a) of this section.

§ 104.44 Determination of presumed noneconomic losses for decedents.

The presumed noneconomic losses for decedents shall be $250,000 plus an additional $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent of the deceased victim. Such presumed losses include a noneconomic component of replacement services loss.

§ 104.45 Determination of presumed economic loss for claimants who suffered physical harm.

In reaching presumed determinations for economic loss for claimants who suffered physical harm (but did not die), the Special Master shall consider sums corresponding to the following:

(a) Loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment. The Special Master may determine the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the claimant, regarding the actual amount of work that the claimant has missed or will miss without compensation. Alternatively, the Special Master may determine the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment by relying upon the methodology created pursuant to § 104.43(a) and adjusting the loss based upon the extent of the victim's physical harm.

(1) Disability; in general. In evaluating claims of disability, the Special Master will, in general, make a determination regarding whether the claimant is capable of performing his or her usual profession in light of the injuries.

(2) Total permanent disability. With respect to claims of total permanent disability, the Special Master may accept a determination of disability made by the Social Security Administration as evidence of disability without any further medical evidence or review. The Special Master may also consider determinations of permanent total disability made by other governmental agencies or private insurers in evaluating the claim. The Special Master may require that the claimant submit an evaluation of the claimant's disability and ability to perform his or her occupation prepared by medical experts.

(3) Partial disability. With respect to claims of partial disability, the Special Master may consider evidence of the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to perform his or her usual occupation as well as the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to participate in usual daily activities.

(b) Medical Expense Loss. This loss equals the out-of-pocket medical expenses that were incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that were not paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). In addition, this loss equals future out-of-pocket medical expenses that will be incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that will not be paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). These losses shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the claimant.

(c) Replacement services loss. For injured claimants who did not have any prior earned income, or who worked only part-time outside the home, economic loss may be determined with reference to replacement services and similar measures.

(d) Loss of business or employment opportunities. Such losses shall be addressed through the procedure outlined above in paragraph (a) of this section.

§ 104.46 Determination of presumed noneconomic losses for claimants who suffered physical harm.

The Special Master may determine the presumed noneconomic losses for claimants who suffered physical harm (but did not die) by relying upon the noneconomic losses described in § 104.44 and adjusting the losses based upon the extent of the victim's physical harm. Such presumed losses include any noneconomic component of replacement services loss.

We were required, of course, to adhere to the language which Congress set out in the statute, including the provisions requiring that awards be offset by all collateral source compensation such as benefits from life insurance and other government programs. However, we did find ambiguity in the statute as to gifts provided to victims and their families by private charities. These regulations do not require that awards be offset by such private charitable assistance.

We have concluded that the purpose of the Act is not simply to examine economic and noneconomic harm, but also to provide compensation that is just and appropriate in light of claimants' individual circumstances. We have concluded that any methodology that does nothing more than attempt to replicate a theoretically possible future income stream would lead to awards that would be insufficient relative to the needs of some victims' families, and excessive relative to the needs of others. The statute specifies that individual circumstances beyond economic and noneconomic harm should be taken into account. It is our view that, absent extraordinary circumstances, awards in excess of $3 million, tax-free, will rarely be appropriate in light of individual needs and resources. At the same time, we want to ensure that victims' families are receiving at least a minimum level of resources to help meet their needs and rebuild their lives. Thus, we have concluded that the families of deceased victims should receive a combined total of at least $500,000 from this program, other state and federal programs, life insurance policies and other sources of compensation. Similarly, the baseline for single decedents should be $300,000. This ensures that every needy claimant's total compensation from this program and other sources will be at least equal to these threshold amounts.

In sum, the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 is an attempt by the American people to demonstrate their solidarity with, and generosity for, those injured by the terrible September 11 attack on our country. It provides an alternative compensation scheme to the traditional tort system, a method of providing substantial and quick compensation to those who elect to participate.

(a) Payments that constitute collateral source compensation. The amount of compensation shall be reduced by all collateral source compensation, including life insurance, pension funds, death benefit programs, and payments by federal, state, or local governments related to the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001.

(b) Payments that do not constitute collateral source compensation. The following payments received by claimants do not constitute collateral source compensation:

(1) The value of services or in-kind charitable gifts such as provision of emergency housing, food, or clothing; and

(2) Charitable donations distributed to the beneficiaries of the decedent, to the injured claimant, or to the beneficiaries of the injured claimant by private charitable entities; provided, however, that the Special Master may determine that funds provided to victims or their families through a private charitable entity constitute, in substance, a payment described in paragraph (a) of this section.

Subpart E - Payment of Claims

§ 104.51 Payments to eligible individuals.

Not later than 20 days after the date on which a determination is made by the Special Master regarding the amount of compensation due a claimant under the Fund, the Special Master shall authorize payment to such claimant of the amount determined with respect to the claimant.

§ 104.52 Distribution of award to decedent's beneficiaries.

The Personal Representative shall distribute the award in a manner consistent with the law of the decedent's domicile or any applicable rulings made by a court of competent jurisdiction. The Personal Representative shall, before payment is authorized, provide to the Special Master a plan for distribution of any award received from the Fund. Notwithstanding any other provision of these regulations or any other provision of state law, in the event that the Special Master concludes that the Personal Representative's plan for distribution does not appropriately compensate the victim's spouse, children, or other relatives, the Special Master may direct the Personal Representative to distribute all or part of the award to such spouse, children, or other relatives.

Subpart F - Limitations

§ 104.61 Limitation on civil actions.

(a) General. Section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act provides that upon the submission of a claim under the Fund, the claimant waives the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any federal or state court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except that this limitation does not apply to civil actions to recover collateral source obligations. The Special Master shall take appropriate steps to inform potential claimants of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act.

(b) Pending actions. Claimants who have filed a civil action or who are a party to such an action as described in paragraph (a) of this section may not file a claim with the Special Master unless they withdraw from such action not later than [PLEASE INSERT DATE WHICH IS 90 DAYS AFTER THE DATE OF PUBLICATION IN THE FEDERAL REGISTER].

§ 104.62 Time limit on filing claims.

§ 104.63 Subrogation.

Compensation under this Fund does not constitute the recovery of tort damages against a third party nor the settlement of a third party action, and the United States shall be subrogated to all potential claims against third party tortfeasors of any victim receiving compensation from the Fund. For that reason, no person or entity having paid other benefits or compensation to or on behalf of a victim shall have any right of recovery, whether through subrogation or otherwise, against the compensation paid by the Fund.

Subpart G - Measures to Protect the Integrity of the Compensation Program

§ 104.71 Procedures to prevent and detect fraud.

(a) Review of claims. For the purpose of detecting and preventing the payment of fraudulent claims and for the purpose of assuring accurate and appropriate payments to eligible claimants, the Special Master shall implement procedures to:

- (1) Verify, authenticate, and audit claims;
- (2) Analyze claim submissions to detect inconsistencies, irregularities, duplication, and multiple claimants; and
- (3) Ensure the quality control of claims review procedures.

(b) Quality control. The Special Master shall institute periodic quality control audits designed to evaluate the accuracy of submissions and the accuracy of payments, subject to the oversight of the Inspector General of the Department of Justice.

(c) False or fraudulent claims. The Special Master shall refer all evidence of false or fraudulent claims to appropriate law enforcement authorities.

APPENDIX TO PREAMBLE
SUMMARY OF PUBLIC COMMENTS SUBMITTED IN RESPONSE TO THE NOVEMBER 5, 2001 NOTICE OF INQUIRY AND ADVANCE NOTICE OF RULEMAKING.

The following is a summary of the comments the Department of Justice ("the Department") received in response to its Notice of Inquiry published on November 5, 2001. The Notice of Inquiry sought input on numerous issues regarding potential regulations for the "September 11 Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund"), which was signed into law as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act")(the "Act").

Over 800 comments were received by the November 26, 2001 deadline established by the Department. Additionally, hundreds of comments have been received since that date. Every comment was – and continues to be – reviewed, considered, and catalogued into one or more of 72 different topics. While the following summary does not address every issue raised by commenters, it provides a general synopsis of the most often raised issues. The summary is not intended to be an exhaustive illustration of every issue contemplated by the Special Master or the Department. Indeed, as mentioned above, all comments were considered in the promulgation of these interim final rules. Finally, the summarized issues below are not arranged in any particular order of importance or level of volume.

The Effective Date of This Interim Final Rule

While the Act specified that this rule should be issued by December 21, 2001, it did not specify when they should become effective. Accordingly, the Department sought comment on this issue. The Department noted that the Administrative Procedure Act generally provides that rules not go into effect for at least 30 days absent "good cause."

Many commenters favored an immediate effective date so that claims could be filed right away. Many indicated an immediate need for relief and expressed frustration about their experiences with obtaining short-term assistance from other sources. However, some commenters thought an immediate effective date would be difficult to implement because the Special Master would need time to hire personnel and to set up the operation of the program before beginning to process claims.

A number of commenters suggested a compromise – making available some amount of short-term relief on an immediate basis to eligible claimants, and then commencing the more detailed review process necessary to provide a final award. Some suggested using flat amounts for these immediate awards, while another commenter suggested establishing an interest-free line of credit upon which families could draw. Another suggestion was that claims for immediate assistance be prioritized by "need."

Eligibility

In its November 5, 2001, Notice of Inquiry, the Department noted that section 405(b) of the statute requires the Special Master to determine whether a claimant is an "eligible individual" under section 405(c). "Eligibility," in turn, is defined by the Act to include: (1) individuals (other than the terrorists) aboard American Airlines flights 11 and 77 and United Airlines flights 93 and 175; or (2) individuals who were "present at" the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, or the site of the aircraft crash at Shanksville, Pennsylvania at the time or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes; or (3) personal representatives of deceased individuals who would otherwise be eligible. Moreover, to be eligible for an award, an individual must have suffered physical harm or death as a result of one of the terrorist-related air crashes. The Department sought comment on whether a Departmental regulation or a statement of policy by the Special Master would be appropriate to clarify these criteria, and if so, what those criteria should be.

The Department specifically invited comment on the following questions related to eligibility:

- How should "present at" be interpreted?
- Should the term "physical harm" be limited to serious injuries, as it is under some other no-fault compensation schemes, (see, e.g., N.Y. Ins. Law § 5102), or should it be construed more broadly?
- Should "physical harm" be limited to currently identifiable injuries?
- Can and should the program address latent, but not yet evident, harm?
- What duration of time is intended by the statutory phrase "immediate aftermath"?

(1) "Present At" And "Immediate Aftermath"

Many of the comments addressed the question of how to define the terms "present at the site" and "immediate aftermath," especially for purposes of those who were in New York at the time of the crashes. Some commenters urged a broad definition of these terms. They recommended that anybody in New York City be considered "present" because the debris and ash from the collapse of the World Trade Towers was widespread. Residents who live near the Ground Zero site in New York urged that they be eligible to recover under the Fund.

In contrast, other commenters argued for a narrower definition of the terms, asserting that the legislation intended to constrain the Fund to the locus of the buildings themselves, and to some very limited time period after the crashes. One comment recommended that "immediate aftermath" be defined as 48 hours after the crashes.

(2) Physical Harm

With respect to the nature of harm involved, some commenters asserted there should be no lower boundary for "nonserious" injuries. Of those who commented on the point, there were disagreements as to whether post-traumatic stress could be considered physical harm for purposes of filing a claim under the Fund. Certain commenters indicated that many people suffered substantial stress from witnessing the attacks and devastation and that they should be eligible to recover from the Fund. However, others argued that the Fund was not intended to cover psychological injury because the language of the statute specifically requires that the claimant suffer "physical harm." These commenters feared that recovery for stress-related injuries would open a Pandora's Box of less serious claims, which, in turn, may reduce the amount of compensation issued to those with the most serious physical injuries.

(3) Latent Harm

Some of the comments focused on the problem of latent injuries and diseases. Several commenters mentioned the coughing they have experienced as a result of exposure to the crash site in New York, and some nearby residents expressed concern about latent harm that might accrue from returning to their homes before the conclusion of the rescue and cleanup efforts. On the other hand, other commenters expressed concern about covering any harms that do not manifest themselves within the two-year lifetime of the Fund. They argued the Fund was not designed to compensate for latent harm primarily because the Fund only exists for two years, and many injuries may not become manifest until after that time.

(4) Eligibility of Victims And Survivors

Some commenters addressed the meaning of the word "victim." For example, some commenters urged that any unborn child who died should be considered eligible for an award as a victim. With respect to a different group of potential claimants, some commenters argued that illegal aliens should not be eligible for awards. However, other commenters did not think that legal status should preclude an award from the Fund.

With regard to claims on behalf of decedent victims, the comments evidenced a tremendous amount of confusion about whether the statute intended to cover only the losses incurred by the victim or the losses incurred by relatives and others. Some commenters noted that section 405 of the Act provides that only claims on behalf of the victim can be filed with the Fund, presumably leaving to the courts any claims by family members or partners on their own behalf. However, some commenters noted that section 403 of the Act states that its purpose is to provide compensation to any individual "or relatives of a deceased individual" who were killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes. The commenters further noted that various types of losses that may be compensated by the Fund pursuant to section 402 are akin to those that in civil actions are normally considered losses to survivors rather than to the victim.

Many commenters commented on the "eligibility" of particular "survivors" of the victim. Some suggested that only a spouse and children be considered "eligible." Others expressed concern as to whether parents, divorced spouses, children of a prior marriage, and others with a legal relationship would be "eligible" for an award under the Fund. In this regard, a number of comments specifically urged that non-married partners and others with a non-traditional relationship be considered "eligible" for an award. Some commenters opposed the idea of extending eligibility under the Fund to those in non-traditional relationships and argued for a narrower definition of eligibility.

Similarly, there were a number of comments about how "eligible" survivors would participate in the decision of whether to submit an application to the Fund, since in their view the application to the Fund would prohibit all of them from filing civil litigation. Some commenters explicitly suggested the law be interpreted to allow claims both on behalf of the decedent's estate and on behalf of any survivors, and suggested that such claims could be consolidated for decision before the Special Master. Others, however, specifically recommended that claims be limited to those on behalf of the estate. Many commenters, presuming that to be the case, recommended that the state courts be responsible for designating the representative to represent the estate, and that any award be distributed in accordance with the requirements of the will or state intestacy law.

Assistance To Claimants

In its Notice of Inquiry of November 5, 2001, the Department noted that it would appear that these requirements -- combined with the statutory time frame for the Special Master to reach a decision once a claim is filed -- contemplate a detailed form and filing. Accordingly, the Department invited comments on whether there are actions the Special Master should be required to take before he can accept a claim, or deem a claim "filed." The Department noted that the statute appeared to provide a very limited time frame for the Special Master to evaluate a claim before making a decision -- 120 days from the date a claim is filed. Accordingly, the Department sought comment on whether the Special Master should be permitted to dismiss a claim as not properly filed for lack of adequate supporting information and, if so, whether an individual should thereafter be permitted to refile the claim. Comments were also solicited on whether it would be advisable to include in the rules a procedure where the time for making a determination could be extended by agreement.

The Department also requested comment on the design and content of the claim forms in light of the statutory requirements, as well as on making the forms and their instructions readable and readily available. The Department also sought comment on how it should implement the statutory requirement that claimants be provided with assistance.

While most of those who commented supported maintaining firm deadlines, many commenters suggested that a claimant be able to "halt the clock" at the claimant's discretion for various purposes (e.g., to provide further evidence before the claim is evaluated, to allow more time to prepare for a hearing, or to allow for an administrative review of an initial award determination). Some suggested that the Special Master also have the authority not to start the clock until the claim contained sufficient information upon which an award determination could be made, or to halt the process for a set period of time to allow for review of an initial determination (provided that the claimant concurred with that decision).

A number of commenters stressed that a claimant should not lose the right to proceed with their claim due to an incomplete file. One commenter suggested the Special Master should have 14 days to review a claim before deciding if there is enough information to proceed. Several commenters suggested that claimants not be required to waive their right to litigation until it was determined the claimant was eligible to recover from the Fund. Similarly, some commenters stated they would have difficulty deciding whether or not to opt into the fund (and thus waive their right to sue) if they did not have some idea or presumption of the range of recovery they might expect from the Fund.

Many commenters urged the Department to establish a simplified procedure for initiating a claim with the Fund. They expressed frustration with the barrage of paperwork required to apply for assistance with other organizations. Some employers offered to provide information on behalf of their employees or survivors in an effort to reduce the paperwork burden on claimants. On the other hand, some noted that -- in light of the pro bono legal assistance that has been offered to the survivors -- claimants would have the option to have the assistance of an attorney to complete the forms. A number of commenters suggested a two-step claims process that would involve a simple initial submission, followed by a more asserted effort to collect additional information with the guidance of claimant assistance personnel from the Office of the Special Master.

A number of commenters had suggestions as to how the Special Master might assist claimants both in filing claims and completing the claims process. Many suggested that local offices be established in New York City, Washington D.C., Pennsylvania, and other cities that served as the domicile of victims. Some urged that outreach efforts be made to locate potential claimants and make them aware of the program's operations. Some mentioned that outreach should include multi-lingual assistance and publications. One group suggested that each Hearing Office have an Applicant's Assistant. Others suggested the Special Master hire victim advocates to assist claimants throughout the process.

The Claims Evaluation Process

The Department solicited comment on whether every claimant should be granted an oral hearing or whether paper hearings may be sufficient, and what types of oral hearing might be practicable in light of the statutory time frames.

Further, the Department sought comment on how evidence might be established and whether it is authorized to enforce requests made by the hearing officer to third parties for evidence that is necessary to a proceeding (e.g., evidence that might bear on whether all aspects of the claim file on which the decision will be based are accurate and complete). The Department sought comment on whether such proceedings should be recorded, whether such proceedings should be held in a location convenient to the claimant, how to deal with scheduling conflicts, and whether the opportunity for a hearing can be waived by a claimant through inaction or unwarranted delay.

Many commenters had opposing views on the role hearings should play in claims evaluation. Some commenters -- comparing this program to civil litigation -- viewed the hearings as essential to each and every claim. These commenters recommended hearings as a sort of "mini-trial," which would include rules of evidence (albeit relaxed rules) and adversarial questioning of witnesses. Using the same analogy, however, these commenters suggested that many claims could be "settled" based on only the paper submissions. Other comments suggested the hearings be more akin to an opportunity -- for those claimants who want to exercise it -- to make an informal oral presentation of their cases. They viewed the hearing as an opportunity to ensure that the decision maker was aware of their individual circumstances. Many of these commenters also suggested, for various reasons, that not all claimants would want a hearing. Some commenters suggested allowing claimants, upon filing a claim, to elect among different "tracks" -- one that would involve a hearing, and one that would not.

On the question of who should be hired as hearing officers, suggestions included retired trust executives, retired judges, attorneys experienced in handling high volume caseloads, and those experienced in civil litigation. Some commenters recommended there be a panel of hearing officers rather than one hearing officer. A number of commenters also recommended that claimants have the opportunity for review of their award to ensure that the decision maker was aware of their individual circumstances.

Many commenters submitted detailed procedural suggestions for the claims process. Among other things, these suggestions dealt with how eligibility and damages could be established through the use of affidavits under penalty of perjury in the event relevant documents had been lost as a result of the crashes themselves (e.g., designations of beneficiaries maintained by employers). Additionally, a number of commenters suggested the Special Master have the right to subpoena evidence required to make a determination.

(1) Meeting the 120-day Deadline

The Department invited comment on what means and mechanisms could be implemented to allow just compensation within the statutorily-mandated 120-day period for processing claims. In particular, the Department sought input on whether and how statistical methodologies should be developed and used as a starting point for decision, and whether publication of hypothetical or presumptive awards for classes of individuals would assist potential claimants in determining whether to opt into the Fund. For the most part, these comments were encapsulated in discussions regarding the calculation of damages; namely, economic and noneconomic losses.

(2) Calculating "Economic Losses"

The Department sought specific comment on how the Special Master should determine "economic losses." Although retaining experts is certainly not prohibited, the Special Master will not require any claimant to obtain legal counsel or other experts to assist in proving or presenting evidence of damages. The Special Master may, however, draw on available information from appropriate specialists in relevant fields to analyze economic losses. The Department invited comment regarding the necessary qualifications for such specialists, the data that should be utilized, the methodologies that should be employed, the documentation that should be required for every claimant, and how state law should bear upon such determinations. In addition, the Department invited comments on how to address the economic losses of individuals whose lost future income streams would have been highly contingent, variable, or unpredictable.

As expected, the range of comments on how best to calculate economic losses was widely varied. One group suggested a minimum value be calculated based on median income and remaining years of work, with flexibility to adjust the award after hearing all the evidence in individual cases. Similarly, certain comments suggested the use of a grid would be appropriate in certain circumstances to identify presumed awards. Others urged that no type of grid be used.

In terms of presumptive valuation, a few commenters recommended that awards mirror the amount a party could anticipate receiving from personal injury or wrongful death actions. Others disagreed. Many recognized the limited opportunities now available to potential plaintiffs filing claims in civil courts arising out of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. At least one commenter argued that the fairest approach in determining economic losses is that which insurance companies use in settling claims.

Some commenters indicated that economic awards should not be based on differences in individual income prior to the crash. Some suggested using a flat dollar figure per surviving family member (e.g., $250,000 for each survivor). Another suggested a flat amount for death at $100,000, injury at $50,000, and various other losses at slated dollar figures. On the other hand, some commenters felt the purpose of the program is to act as a substitute for civil damage actions, and that efforts should be made to determine and take into consideration the amount of income likely lost by a decedent. A large number of comments were received with respect to how to establish such income (e.g., average over a certain number of prior years, plus information supplied by employers on future prospects).

(3) Calculating "Noneconomic Losses"

The Department also sought comment as to "noneconomic losses." Most notably, the Department invited comments regarding whether, and in what manner, the Special Master can or should draw meaningful distinctions between both those victims who died in different locations and those who suffered similar injuries. The Department also invited comments on whether the Department should (as some have suggested) issue regulations determining the amount of noneconomic loss for classes of similarly situated individuals or whether, instead, the Special Master should determine all noneconomic loss on a detailed claim-by-claim basis. Further, the Department requested comment on what facts and circumstances should be considered in determining noneconomic losses for each individual, and what standards should be employed.

Comments regarding noneconomic losses were similarly varied. One commenting association suggested noneconomic losses -- such as pain and suffering -- should be standardized because such losses do not vary by income strata. Numerous commenters advocated a "fixed" noneconomic award, stating that the government should not attempt to draw distinctions in the amount of pain suffered by victims or their survivors. One commenter suggested the most equitable process for determining noneconomic awards would be an elective process. Under this proposed method, a claimant could elect to have the award calculated by use of a matrix, or alternatively, could present evidence at a hearing to establish the amount to which the claimant

Neither this Fund nor any monetary compensation can possibly provide a full measure of relief to those who have suffered as a result of September 11. But the Fund will provide appropriate compensation and some measure of comfort to those whose lives have been torn asunder by the events of September 11.

Background.

The following discussion provides background information and explanation of the regulations promulgated herein. Section A describes the statutory backdrop for the regulations; Section B discusses the Department's rulemaking procedures to date; Section C addresses Eligibility; Section D pertains to Advance Benefits; Section E discusses Final Awards made by the Fund; Section F describes the Special Master's claims evaluation process; and Section G relates to Assistance to Claimants. The text of the regulations is set forth following these explanatory sections. A catalog of public commentary is set forth thereafter as an Appendix. More detailed information regarding the program, including a flow chart of applicable procedures and a table of estimated or "presumed" awards, will be available on the Victims Compensation Fund website at www.usdoj.gov/victimcompensation.

A. The Statute.

The President signed the "September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund") into law on September 22, 2001, as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act") ("the Act"). The purpose of this Fund is to provide compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and compensation through a "personal representative" for those who died as a result of the crashes. Generally, eligibility is limited to: (1) individuals on the planes at the time of the crashes (other than the terrorists); and (2) individuals present at the World Trade Center, the Pentagon or the site of the crash in Pennsylvania at the time of the crashes or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes.

The Fund is designed to provide a no-fault alternative to tort litigation for individuals who were physically injured or killed as a result of the aircraft hijackings and crashes on September 11, 2001. Others who may have suffered losses as a result of those events (e.g., those without identifiable physical injuries but who lost employment) are not included in this special program. Indeed, compensation will be provided only for losses caused on account of personal physical injuries or death, even though the victims may have suffered other losses, such as property loss. For this reason, the Department and the Special Master anticipate that all awards believes he or she is entitled. A number of commenters argued that the statute necessitated an entirely individualized determination of noneconomic losses in every case. A group representing survivors of decedents suggested that noneconomic losses must be uncapped and based, in part, on the number and age of any surviving children or dependents, the current and future pain and suffering experienced by the victim's family, and the severity of pain suffered by the victim himself or herself.

(4) Taxation

A number of commenters raised questions about the taxability of various kinds of awards issued under the Fund. Several commenters asserted that compensation from the Fund should be nontaxable under federal law, similar to various types of tort awards. Another commenter stated that state victim compensation fund awards generally are not taxable, either by the state or the federal government. On the other hand, another commenter stated he did not see the purpose of distributing taxpayers' money to victims, and urged taxing the awards so as to return some of the money to the Treasury.

Collateral Sources

The Department sought comments on the issue of collateral sources. Although the Act requires that collateral sources be deducted from awards issued under the Fund (and explicitly outlines examples of certain types of collateral sources), the Department invited comment as to how the term "collateral source" should be defined.

(1) General Comments

Despite the explicit language in the Act, a number of commenters took issue with deducting any collateral sources whatsoever. Although many recognized that both the Department and the Special Master are bound to follow the language in the Act, they nonetheless argued that collateral sources are -- in many states -- not offset in wrongful death suits. Some urged that the type of collateral source offsets should be interpreted narrowly. A number of commenters also suggested that if collateral source benefits to a victim are to be offset, a counter-offset should be made for the premiums or contributions made by the victim to purchase various benefits. Others specifically suggested that only the value of collateral benefits funded by a victim's employer should be offset.

Many commenters, however, asserted that the program should not "unjustly enrich" the victims or their survivors, and supported the use of widespread offsets. Some of these comments mentioned that -- although the statute does not provide either a ceiling or floor for the amount of awards -- the Fund may have only a limited pool of resources to distribute to claimants (akin to the funds being collected and distributed by charitable organizations), and suggested the need to help those most in need. Other comments noted that unjust enrichment should not flow through tax-payer dollars. It was mentioned that many taxpayers -- who ultimately will provide the funds under the program -- also sent in charitable contributions not to unjustly enrich victims or their families, but, rather, solely to help them through these troubled times.

(2) "A claimant has received or is entitled to receive"

Some commenters specifically focused on the word "claimant" in the phrase "a claimant has received or is entitled to receive," and urged that any collateral source benefits not paid or to be paid directly to the claimant not be deducted from the award. These comments were often parallel to those concerning the question of whose losses are to be compensated under the Fund:

only those of the decedent (estate), or those of others as well. (See the discussion of Eligibility.)

A number of comments also focused on the words "entitled to receive." Some recommended that only those collateral benefits scheduled to be paid as a result of contractual or other clear obligations should be deducted from an award. Others recommended that only the present value of any future contingent awards be considered in making any offset.

(3) Life Insurance

Many commenters were frustrated that the Act requires life insurance proceeds to be deducted from awards. Many asserted that deducting life insurance will penalize those who planned ahead. One suggested that life insurance should only be offset if payable to a dependent of the victim, and another group of commenters indicated that only the sums received by the eligible applicant net of all taxes that exceed the premiums -- or other payments made by the applicant -- be deducted. A number suggested that if life insurance is to be offset, the premiums paid should be returned to the victim by reducing the amount of the benefit offset.

(4) Pensions

While similar concerns (as to life insurance) were raised in connection with pensions, a more common comment concerned the meaning of the term "pension." For example, some commenters noted that pensions are not normally considered to be "compensation for a loss" but are instead akin to savings.

(5) Workers Compensation And Victim Assistance Programs

One commenter pointed out that most of the victims may be eligible for workers' compensation benefits because they were killed while on the job. Further, with respect to those receiving benefits under New York law, the compensation insurer can terminate workers' compensation payments -- absent claimants obtaining consent to enter the Fund -- if benefits are being paid to the injured workers or survivors. New York State legal authorities confirmed the noteworthiness of this issue, and recommended that workers' compensation payments not be considered a collateral source to this extent.

With respect to state victim assistance funds, one commenter noted that 42 U.S.C. § 10602(e) -- which generally provides that state crime victim boards may refuse to pay out benefits if another Federal program is paying benefits -- was explicitly amended to exclude payments made under the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001. The commenter suggested that some programs covered under that code provision -- that have already made payments -- may be entitled to reimbursement as a result.

(6) Charitable Contributions

Many victims of the terrorist-related crashes on September 11, 2001, have or may receive support from special funds set up to assist them, as well as from special programs established by some of their employers to share future profits and the like. Accordingly, whether to reduce Fund awards by the amount of such contributions was one of the issues given the most attention in the comments. Notably, this issue was discussed in a number of news articles at about the time the Notice of Inquiry was issued.

Commenters were heavily divided on this issue. Many were strongly opposed to reducing awards by the amount of charity funding received. This includes some commenters who donated to charities established for this purpose, as well as employers who established funds to help the families of the victims. Many insisted that funds collected by employers solely for the purpose of compensating victims of the September 11 attacks should not be deemed a collateral source. Many drew a distinction between funds provided for short-term assistance and need, and those designed to compensate victims for their losses.

On the other hand, a number of comments from those who contributed money to various charities viewed the purposes of the charities and the Fund as one and the same; namely, compensating the victims. These commenters asserted they had not intended making contributions to unjustly enrich the families, and would hesitate to make such contributions in the future if their help turns out only to ensure persons maintain a certain lifestyle.

A number of commenters also pointed to the practical difficulties of trying to establish what claimants may have received from charities. Some suggested the Fund should have access to any database of charitable contributions, including one that was reported to be under consideration in New York.

After discussing these factors, some commenters suggested that the Special Master only offset charitable contributions over a certain amount. A few commenters suggested only offsetting charities set up for longer term assistance to the victims (e.g., tuition funds or scholarships for the children of all the victims).

Payment of Awards

Some commenters expressed the view that payments by the fund should be in the form of "structured settlements" or annuities rather than in lump sum. One commenter suggested payments to children should go to a trustee for the benefit of the child. However, other commenters argued for lump sum payments and objected to the government placing any restrictions on the claimants' award.

Limitations on Fees for Assistance And Payment by the Special Master

The Department requested comments on whether the Special Master has the authority to limit the types and amounts of fees that can be charged by counsel, accountants, experts or others who are retained by claimants to assist them to file and pursue compensation claims, and whether such fees can and should be paid by the Special Master directly out of compensation awards. The Department also solicited comments on what limitations, if any, the rules should impose on non-attorney, non-claimant representatives' participation in filing claims.

A number of commenters noted that the right to be represented by counsel is provided by the statute, that not all claimants would be comfortable using pro-bono counsel to represent their interests, and that payment of attorneys' fees is necessary to ensure representation by counsel of choice. Some of these commenters suggested, however, that fees could be limited so as not to exceed 10% of the award to claimant. Paradoxically, some commenters opposed using any amount of money from the Fund to pay legal fees.

from the Fund will be free of federal taxation. See I.R.C. § 104(a)(2) (stating that damages received "on account of personal physical injuries or physical sickness" are excludable from gross income for purposes of federal income taxation).

A claimant who files for compensation waives any right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any federal or state court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for actions to recover collateral source obligations.

Determinations on eligibility and the amount of compensation are to be made by the Special Master. After determining whether an individual is an eligible claimant under the Act, the Special Master is to determine the amount of compensation to be awarded based upon the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant.

The law also provides that the Special Master is to make a final determination on any claim within 120 days from when the claim was filed and, if an award is made, to authorize payment within 20 days thereafter. The determinations of the Special Master are final and are not reviewable by any court. Claims with the Fund must be filed on or before two years after the effective date of these regulations, i.e. [insert date 2 years from date of this publication in the FEDERAL REGISTER]. Payments from the Fund are made by the United States Government, which in turn obtains the right of subrogation to each award.

Pursuant to the Act, regulations addressing certain administrative matters must be issued within 90 days of enactment. Section 407 of the Act provides that the Department, in consultation with the Special Master, promulgate regulations on four matters by December 21, 2001:

- (1) Forms to be used in submitting claims;
- (2) The information to be included in such forms;
- (3) Procedures for hearing and the presentation of evidence; and
- (4) Procedures to assist an individual in filing and pursuing claims under this title.

In addition, section 407 authorizes, but does not require, the Department to issue additional rules to implement the program. This Interim Final Rule addresses issues beyond the four specifically required by the Act in order to create a program that will be efficient, will treat similarly situated claimants alike, and will allow potential claimants to make informed decisions regarding whether to file claims with the Fund. Nonetheless, the Department recognizes that it cannot anticipate all of the issues that will arise over the course of the program and that there will inevitably be many difficult issues that the Special Master will have to resolve in the course of making determinations on individual claims.

B. Rulemaking history to date.

On November 5, 2001, the Department requested public input on a number of issues. 66 FR 55901. The Department noted that, at that time, the Special Master had not yet been appointed, but that it wanted as much public comment as feasible before issuing the regulations by December 21, 2001. On November 26, 2001, the Attorney General appointed Kenneth R. Feinberg as Special Master. As called for by the Act, this interim final rule is promulgated in consultation with the Special Master.

The Department received more than 800 comments in response to the Department's Notice of Inquiry. Some were very brief and only spoke to a single issue; others responded to the Department's questions on a point by point basis. Still others contained detailed analyses, recommendations and even proposed regulatory language.

The range of commenters was very broad. Some commenters identified themselves as citizens, taxpayers or law professors, and many identified themselves as individuals who had contributed to charities for those impacted by the terrorist crashes. Many other commenters identified themselves as members of victims' families, partners or close friends, including some from organizations and groups of survivors. Several commenters identified themselves as employers who lost a significant number of employees in the crashes. A number of commenters identified themselves as residents of housing near "Ground Zero" in New York.

In addition, the Department received comments from many organizations including the American Insurance Association, the American Arbitration Association, the American Bar Association, Trial Lawyers Care, New York Trial Lawyers' Association, New York City Bar Association, Massachusetts Bar Association, National Center for Victims of Crime, National Association of Crime Victim Compensation Boards, the Oklahoma Crime Victim Compensation Board, Consumers Union, Public Citizen, the National Right To Life Committee, the Lambda Legal Defense & Education Fund, the American Civil Liberties Union, the Association of Flight Attendants, the Council on Foundations, the Nonprofit Coordinating Committee of New York, Independent Sector, the Alternative Dispute Resolution of the Federal Bar Association, the Alliance of Fiduciary Consultants, and the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission.

Individual members of Congress, groups of members, and members of the Senate leadership also provided comments. Further, joint comments were submitted on behalf of the New York City Mayor, the New York Governor, and the New York Attorney General, by members of the New York Assembly, and by the Attorney General of Connecticut.

Comments were also submitted by United Airlines and American Airlines, and from various individuals and companies who identified themselves as having expertise or experience in the administration of claims programs.

The Department has read every submission it received in response to this notice, from handwritten notes to scholarly discussions. The Department wants to express its appreciation for the time and careful thought reflected in those submissions.

While the Department has reviewed every submission it received, it will not regulate on every topic addressed in those comments. Over 70 separate topics were identified; almost two dozen full size notebooks are necessary to organize all of the comments by topic. All of the comments will be retained by the Department for subsequent consideration when it reviews comments on this interim final rule, and the comments will remain posted on the Department's web site where they may be reviewed by the public. The Department was pleased to see that some comments responded to others placed on the web site, and hopes this facility will continue to be of interest to the public.

It is not feasible to repeat here all of the suggestions received in the comments, let alone directly respond to each. The Appendix to this interim final rulemaking highlights some of the points raised by commenters in order to indicate the range of views received on how various issues should be approached.

C. Eligibility.

Section 405(b) of the Act requires the Special Master to determine whether a claimant is an "eligible individual" under section 405(c). "Eligibility," in turn, is defined by the Act to include: (1) individuals (other than the terrorists) aboard American Airlines flights 11 and 77 and United Airlines flights 93 and 175; (2) individuals who were "present at" the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, or the site of the aircraft crash at Shanksville, Pennsylvania at the time or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes; or (3) personal representatives of deceased individuals who would otherwise be eligible. Moreover, to be eligible for an award, an individual must have suffered physical harm or death as a result of one of the terrorist-related air crashes. This interim final rule addresses eligibility by defining the terms "present at the site," "immediate aftermath," "physical harm," and "personal representative."

"Present at the site": This rule defines the term "present at the site" (i.e. the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville site) to mean physically present at the time of the crashes or immediate aftermath:

(1) In the buildings or portions of buildings that were destroyed as a result of the airplane crashes; or

(2) In any area contiguous to the crash sites that the Special Master determines was sufficiently close to the site that there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm resulting from the impact of the aircraft or any subsequent fire, explosions, or collapse of buildings (generally, the immediate area in which the impact occurred, fire occurred, portions of buildings fell, or debris fell upon and injured persons).

There are several reasons for this geographic limitation. First, this geographic limitation comports with the plain meaning of the statutory term "present at." Second, this geographic limitation is consistent with the further statutory requirement of physical injury or death, because the zone designated is that in which there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm from falling debris, explosions, or fire.

"Immediate aftermath": This rule defines the term "immediate aftermath" of the crashes to mean, for purposes of all claimants other than rescue workers, the period of time from the crashes until 12 hours after the crashes. This time frame appears to cover all of those who suffered physical injury or death, with the exception of rescue workers.

With respect to rescue workers who assisted in efforts to search for and recover victims, the regulations define "the immediate aftermath" to include the period from the crashes until 96 hours after the crashes. The regulations provide for this longer time period for rescue workers in recognition of their heroic efforts and their selfless reasons for being at the sites, and responds to a request by the Mayor of New York City that the program recognize the high level of danger and difficulty during the first four days of rescue operations.

"Physical harm": This rule defines the term "physical harm" to mean an objectively verifiable physical injury that was treated by a medical professional within 24 hours of the injury having been sustained or within 24 hours of rescue and either required hospitalization as an in-patient for at least 24 hours or caused, either temporarily or permanently, partial or total physical disability, incapacity, or disfigurement.

There are several reasons for this definition. The statutory term "physical harm" indicates that Congress did not intend for this Fund to compensate those who suffered only emotional harm or property damage. The statutory term "physical harm" also indicates that Congress did not intend for this Fund to cover those who face only a risk of future injury (i.e. latent harm that does not fully manifest itself within the statutory time period for this Fund). Indeed, because participation in this Fund precludes claimants from recovering through tort litigation, those with latent injuries that later became manifest would likely be undercompensated if they sought compensation now from the Fund before the injuries became manifest. Conversely, those who recovered for latent injuries that did not later become manifest could be overcompensated if they recovered from the Fund. While Congress might later consider whether an administrative program for latent harm caused by the September 11, 2001 terrorist-related aircraft crashes may be appropriate, the language of the statute that created this Fund does not contemplate awards for that purpose.

"Personal Representative": Section 405(c)(2)(C) provides that in the case of an individual who is deceased but who otherwise meets the other criteria for eligibility, a claim can be filed by the Personal Representative of the decedent. Section 405(c)(3)(A) provides that no more than one claim may be submitted by an individual or on behalf of a deceased individual.

In many or most cases, the identity of the "Personal Representative" will not be in dispute. Where there are disputes, two issues arise: (1) what are the rules for determining who is the Personal Representative?; and (2) who should apply the rules and resolve the dispute?

As to the first issue, the regulations rely on state law. Subject to certain contingencies, this rule defines the term "Personal Representative" to mean an individual appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction as the Personal Representative of the decedent or as the executor or administrator of the decedent's will or estate. In the event that no Personal Representative or executor or administrator has been appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction, and such issue is not the subject of pending litigation or other dispute, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative is the person named by the decedent in the decedent's will as the executor or administrator. In the event no will exists, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative is the first person in the line of succession established by the laws of the state of the decedent's domicile governing intestacy.

Reliance on state law is necessary in part because those who file for recovery under the Fund waive their rights to recover through litigation, in which state law would determine the identity of the appropriate representatives of the decedent, or the decedent's estate, to bring suit. Thus, if the identity of Personal Representatives for purposes of this Fund were determined by federal regulation, there could be many situations in which the representative as defined by state law would choose litigation while the Personal Representative as defined by federal regulation would seek to recover from the Fund.

The second issue raises questions of program administration. Disputes between relatives, former spouses and other interested parties can be exceptionally fact-intensive and time-consuming. Indeed, state courts often spend considerable time and resources resolving such matters. The Special Master cannot accomplish his statutory duties if bogged down with these types of complex disputes. Nor would it be advisable for the Special Master to attempt to step in and supplant state court practice or the testamentary intent of decedents. Consequently, the rule provides that the Special Master has no obligation to arbitrate, litigate or otherwise resolve disputes as to the identity of the Personal Representative. Instead, to ensure that funds are not needlessly tied up due to disputes regarding the identity of the Personal Representative, the regulations provide that the disputing parties may agree in writing to the identity of a Personal Representative to act on their behalf, who may seek and accept payment from the Fund while those disputing parties work to settle their dispute. In appropriate cases, the Special Master may determine an award, but place the payment in escrow until the dispute regarding the Personal Representative is finally resolved.

Finally, the determination of the Personal Representative is not the same question as the determination of who ultimately will receive the award. In that regard, this rule provides that the Personal Representative shall distribute the award in a manner consistent with the law of the decedent's domicile or any applicable rulings made by a court of competent jurisdiction.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Office of the Attorney General

28 CFR Part 104

CIV 104P; AG Order No.

RIN: 1105-AA79

September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001

ACTION: Interim final rule with request for comments.

SUMMARY: Shortly after the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, the President signed the "September 11 Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund") into law as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act") (the "Act"). The Act authorizes compensation to any individual (or the personal representative of a deceased individual) who was physically injured or killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes on that day. The Act provides that the Fund will be administered by a Special Master appointed by the Attorney General. On November 26, 2001, the Attorney General appointed Kenneth R. Feinberg as Special Master.

The Department of Justice, in consultation with the Special Master, is issuing certain procedural rules so the Special Master may commence operations of the program as soon as practicable. In order to allow the Special Master to begin distributing funds, the Department is issuing this rule as an "Interim Final Rule" that will have the force and effect of law immediately upon publication. This rule is designated "interim," however, because the Department is also seeking further comment for a period of 30 days as part of its further review and may expand or adjust aspects of the rule after receiving additional comments.

However, in order to assure that the families of needy victims receive adequate compensation, the regulations further provide that the Personal Representative shall, before payment is authorized, provide to the Special Master a plan for distribution of any award received from the Fund. Notwithstanding any other provision of these regulations or any other provision of state law, in the event that the Special Master concludes that the Personal Representative's plan for distribution does not appropriately compensate the victim's spouse, children, or other relatives, the Special Master may direct the Personal Representative to distribute all or part of the award to such spouse, children, or other relatives.

D. Advance Benefits

In order to comply with the Attorney General's November 26, 2001 instructions to the Special Master to pay benefits to eligible claimants as quickly as possible, these regulations permit claimants to seek immediate "Advance Benefits" in the fixed amount of $50,000 in the case of deceased individuals and $25,000 in the case of severely injured individuals who required hospitalization for one week or more.

To qualify for advance benefits, applicants must complete a short form (the "Eligibility Form") identifying basic eligibility and indicating that advance benefits would assist them in confronting current or immediate financial hardships. Such forms will be made available at claims intake centers as they are established, in response to telephone requests (888-714-3385, 202-305-1352, TDD: 888-560-0844), and on the Victims Compensation Fund website at www.usdoj.gov/victimcompensation.

Eligible claimants may apply for and receive advance benefits and then file their lengthier "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" at any time within the two-year time frame for filing claims under the program. This will allow needy eligible claimants to obtain prompt advance payments even though they may need more time to collect full information regarding the amount of compensation they seek. The 120-day period for determination of compensation will be stayed or tolled until the claimant files the completed "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" needed to allow the Special Master to determine the amount of the final award. However, once a claimant applies for Advance Benefits and is deemed eligible to recover under the Fund, the claimant will be deemed to have waived the right to file a civil action in state or federal court for damages sustained as a result of the September 11 attacks.

Advance benefits will be treated as advance payments on ultimate awards from the Fund. Thus, the amount of any advance benefits received will be deducted from the claimant's subsequent award.

E. Final awards made by the Fund.

Section 405(b) of the Act provides that the Special Master shall compensate eligible claimants based on the harm to the claimant (including both economic loss and noneconomic losses), the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant. The Act further provides that the Special Master shall determine the claimant's eligibility and the amount of compensation within 120 days.

The Special Master and the Department have studied the language of the Act, the varying public comments, evidence and data about the many victims of the September 11 attacks, and economic and demographic studies and data in fashioning the interim final rule. After this careful consideration, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that the following principal objectives should guide any determination of economic and noneconomic losses.

The first objective is that the process should be efficient, straightforward, and understandable to the claimants. This objective is based in part upon the statutory requirement that the Special Master review each claim and make an award determination within 120 days of filing. More important, however, is that claimants be able to enter the program -- or choose not to enter the program -- with an understanding of how their claims will be treated. This is especially important because the Act provides that, upon submission of a claim, a claimant waives the right to file a civil action for damages sustained as a result of the September 11 attacks. For claimants to make an informed decision regarding this waiver, they should have some understanding of how their award will be calculated and how much they would receive from the Fund should they decide to file a claim.

The second objective is that each claimant should, to the greatest extent possible, be treated fairly based on the claimant's own individual circumstances and relative to other claimants. While the circumstances of death for many victims will differ, those circumstances will in many cases be unknowable. In principle, similarly situated claimants should not receive dramatically differing treatment.

After careful consideration, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that, in order best to achieve these principal objectives, the Special Master should develop a methodology for calculating presumed economic and noneconomic losses that is based on readily identifiable individual circumstances for each claimant, such as age, prior income levels, marital status, and the number and ages of the victim's dependents. A methodology for determining presumed economic and noneconomic losses will also assist the Special Master in making fair and appropriate compensation determinations swiftly and efficiently within the time frame permitted by the Act.

In order to enable claimants to make informed decisions regarding whether to submit a claim under the Fund and, if so, whether to submit evidence of extraordinary individual circumstances that could justify departure from the presumed awards, the interim final rule directs the Special Master to publish schedules, tables, or charts of presumed determinations for economic and noneconomic losses. While these schedules, tables, or charts cannot cover every possible claimant (e.g., injured claimants), they are extensive and detailed enough to provide the majority of potential claimants with a general dollar range into which their awards may fall.

Nonetheless, the Special Master and the Department recognize that it will be impossible to fashion a presumptive methodology that will take into account all of the individual facts and circumstances for every claimant. Rather, some claimants may have extraordinary individual circumstances that justify departure from the presumed awards. Thus, the interim final rule provides that claimants may request that the Special Master depart from the presumed economic and noneconomic losses based upon a demonstration of extraordinary circumstances that the presumed award methodology does not adequately address.

Economic loss: Determination of economic loss requires a prediction about each claimant's future. This assessment will be, by its nature, somewhat speculative. While the determination of economic loss should be based upon facts regarding the individual victim where those facts are available, some facts cannot be predicted on an individualized basis.

The regulations also provide that the Special Master's schedules, tables, or charts should identify presumed determinations of economic loss up to a salary level commensurate with the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States. The Department recognizes that projecting earnings over worklife for people with extraordinary annual incomes is a very complex exercise, often requiring a detailed evaluation of variable and often complex formulae for nonvariable income, differing work life expectations, often highly volatile industries or markets, and other factors that are not often subject to easy generalization. We have also concluded that the purpose of the Act is not simply to examine economic and noneconomic harm, but also to provide compensation that is just and appropriate in light of the financial needs and resources of claimants. Any methodology that does nothing more than attempt to replicate a theoretically possible future income stream would lead to awards that would be insufficient relative to the needs of some victims' families, and excessive relative to the needs of others. Therefore, a claimant should not assume that he or she will receive an award greater than the presumed award simply because the victim had an income that exceeded the income for the 98th percentile. Indeed, the Act's requirement that the Special Master consider "the individual circumstances of the claimant" indicates that the Special Master may consider a particular claimant's financial needs and resources, just as the Department and the Special Master considered the needs of the claimants in concluding that no claimant bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim should receive less than $500,000 or $300,000 before collateral source offsets.

If a claimant seeks review of a presumed award, the Special Master may consider a range of information, including demographic information on retirement trends for high wage earners, the individual's historical expenses, savings, and any other factors he deems relevant, including economic trends, information available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Census Bureau and other entities on average income and retirement age for the victim's profession or even for the victim's former employer. Claimants should not expect awards grossly in excess of the highest awards listed on the Special Master's presumed award chart, as the individual circumstances of the wealthiest and highest-income claimants will often indicate that multi-million dollar awards out of the public coffers are not necessary to provide them with a strong economic foundation from which to rebuild their lives.

The Special Master and the Department recognize that the extent of physical injury for those victims who survived the September 11 attacks may vary to a degree that does not lend itself to a schedule, table, or chart. If the claimant's injury causes only a temporary disability, the Special Master may consider evidence regarding the length of time the claimant was absent from his employment in determining the appropriate compensation for economic loss. For those victims who suffered permanent physical disability, the Special Master may rely upon his economic loss methodology, but adjust the award based upon the extent of the physical disability. In evaluating claims of disability, the Special Master will, in general, make a determination regarding whether the claimant is capable of performing his or her usual profession in light of the injuries.

With respect to claims of total permanent disability, the Special Master may accept a determination of disability made by the Social Security Administration as evidence of disability without any further medical evidence or review. The Special Master may also consider determinations of permanent total disability made by other governmental agencies or private insurers in evaluating the claim. The Special Master may require an evaluation of the claimant's disability and ability to perform his or her occupation from medical experts.

With respect to claims of partial disability, the Special Master may consider evidence of the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to perform his or her usual occupation as well as the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to participate in usual daily activities.

Noneconomic losses: Each person who was killed or injured in the September 11 attacks suffered grievous harm, and each person experienced the unspeakable events of that day in a unique way. Some victims experienced terror for many minutes, as they were held hostage by terrorists on an airplane or trapped in a burning building. Some victims had no warning of what was coming and died within seconds of a plane hitting the building in which they worked. While these circumstances may be knowable in a few extraordinary circumstances, for the vast majority of victims these circumstances are unknowable.

After extensive fact finding, public outreach, and review of public comments, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that the most rational and just way to approach the imponderable task of placing a dollar amount upon the pain, emotional suffering, loss of enjoyment of life, and mental anguish suffered by the thousands of victims of the September 11 attacks is to assess the noneconomic losses for categories of claimants. The most obvious distinction is between those who died and those who suffered physical injury but survived.

The regulations therefore set a presumed award for noneconomic losses sustained. For those victims who died as a result of the September 11 aircraft crashes, the presumed noneconomic losses will be $250,000, plus an additional $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent of the deceased victim. That $250,000 figure is roughly equivalent to the amounts received under existing federal programs by public safety officers who are killed while on duty, or members of our military who are killed in the line of duty while serving our nation. See 38 U.S.C. § 1967 (military personnel); 42 U.S.C. § 3796 (Public Safety Officers Benefit Program). The latter figures -- $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent -- include a noneconomic component of "replacement services loss."

For those victims who suffered physical injury but survived the September 11 attacks, the Special Master may establish a methodology for estimating their noneconomic losses. The Special Master may determine that it is appropriate to give some percentage of the noneconomic loss award given for victims who died, based upon the extent of the injury.

The Special Master and the Department recognize, however, that no presumed award can take into account all of the unique individual circumstances of each claimant. Accordingly, as noted above, claimants may either accept the presumed award or instead attempt to demonstrate in a hearing before the Special Master extraordinary circumstances that justify departure from the presumed award.

Collateral Sources: Section 405(b)(6) of the Act provides that the Special Master shall

reduce the amount of compensation by the amount of the collateral source compensation "a claimant has received or is entitled to receive" as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. The interim final rule provides that collateral sources will include life insurance, pension funds, death benefit programs, and payments by federal, state, or local governments related to the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. While many public commenters voiced strong opposition to the inclusion of some or all of these as collateral source compensation, the Act expressly includes each one within the definition of "collateral sources."

At the same time, the Act does not address whether certain other types of payments constitute collateral source compensation. The interim final rule provides that the following are not collateral source compensation:

(1) The value of services or in-kind charitable gifts such as provision of emergency housing, food, or clothing; and

(2) Charitable donations distributed to the beneficiaries of the decedent, to the injured claimant, or to the beneficiaries of the injured claimant by private charitable entities; provided, however, that the Special Master may determine that funds provided to victims or their families through a private charitable entity constitute, in substance, a collateral source as described above.

The Department has concluded that charitable contributions should not be considered collateral source compensation within the meaning of the Act because, among other reasons, such charitable contributions are different in kind from the collateral sources listed in the Act. Moreover, because the collateral offset only applies to collateral source compensation that the claimant has received or is entitled to receive, deducting charitable awards from the amount of compensation would have the perverse effect of encouraging potential donors to withhold their giving until after claimants have received their awards from the Fund.

F. The claims evaluation process.

Section 405(b)(4) of the Act provides that a claimant, after the filing of the claim, has the right to present evidence to the Office of the Special Master. The statute specifically provides that the claimant has the right to present witness statements and documents, the right to obtain legal counsel, and such other due process rights as are determined to be appropriate by the Special Master.

The interim final regulations provide claimants with a choice of two Procedural Options -- Track A or Track B. If a claimant selects Track A, the Claims Evaluator will determine eligibility and the claimant's presumed award and, within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination, the amount of the presumed award, and the right to request a hearing before the Special Master or his designee under § 104.33 of these regulations. After an eligible claimant has been notified of the presumed award, the claimant may either accept the presumed compensation determination as the final determination and request payment, or may instead request a review before the Special Master or his designee pursuant to § 104.33. If a claimant opts for a review, the claimant may make supplemental submissions. The Special Master may alter or modify the award if the presumed award was calculated erroneously, or if the claimant demonstrates extraordinary circumstances indicating that the presumed award does not adequately address the claimant's injury. There will be no further review or appeal from this determination.

If the claimant selects Track B, a Claims Evaluator will determine eligibility within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, but shall not determine the claimant's presumed award. The Claims Evaluator will then notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination. Upon notification of eligibility, the claimant will proceed to a hearing pursuant to § 104.33. At such hearing, the Special Master or his designee will utilize the presumed award methodology, but may modify or vary the award if the claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumed award methodology. There shall be no review or appeal from this determination.

Hearings, when sought, will be held by the Special Master or his designee. These hearings shall be conducted in a nonadversarial manner, the objective of which will be to permit the claimant to present information or evidence that the claimant believes is necessary to a full understanding of the claim. Claimants will be permitted, but not required, to present witnesses, including expert witnesses. The hearing officer shall be permitted to examine the credentials of experts.

The hearings shall be limited in length to a time period determined by the Special Master or the relevant hearing officer, but generally not to exceed two hours. The hearings shall, to the extent practicable, be scheduled at times and in locations convenient to the claimant or his or her representative. The claimant shall be entitled to be represented by an attorney in good standing, but it is not necessary that the claimant be represented by an attorney.

G. Assistance to claimants.

In its November 5, 2001 Notice of Inquiry, the Department noted that section 405(a) of the Act establishes some specific requirements with respect to the claim form and the information to be included. The law requires the Special Master to develop a claim form to use in filing claims for compensation under this program. The Special Master is to ensure that the form can be filed electronically if it is determined to be practicable. Moreover, by law, the form must include a statement of the factual basis for eligibility and information regarding income in recent years. In addition, the form is to request information from the claimant as to: (1) the physical harm suffered by a victim, or information confirming the death of the victim, as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001; (2) income tax returns for recent years and other records; and (3) documentation regarding collateral source compensation including life insurance policies and government or employment-related programs which have or may provide funds or benefits to the claimant.

The Department believes that it is important that this Fund be accessible to potential claimants who have limited resources and who are not trained in the law. Rather than attempt to address in detail the means by which the Special Master should provide assistance to claimants, these regulations leave the Special Master with discretion to implement steps to provide assistance to claimants and to make this Fund accessible to them.

Because the Act does not provide for payment of legal or other fees by the Fund, these regulations do not impose any limits on the types or amount of fees that claimants may pay their attorneys or others providing assistance. Although the Department's regulations do not set specific limits on attorneys fees separate from those existing in state law or attorney ethical standards, the Department believes that contingency arrangements exceeding 5% of a claimant's recovery from the Fund would not be in the best interest of the claimants.

The Department contemplates that the Special Master will have discretion to inform potential claimants of the nature of the Fund so that they may make informed decisions regarding the types or amount of fees that they pay for legal or other assistance. For example, the Special Master may notify claimants and potential claimants of the availability of free legal services. Likewise, the Special Master may inform claimants and potential claimants that the Fund is a no-fault, administrative scheme that should not involve the kind of risks and expense that would justify any significant contingency fees.

These regulations similarly do not address the manner in which claimants may use funds that they receive from the Fund, except that the Personal Representatives must agree in an acknowledgment and release form to distribute the award to the beneficiaries of the decedent in accordance with the decedent's will or applicable state law or ruling by a court of competent jurisdiction. While the Department does not believe that it is appropriate for the Special Master to place further legal restrictions on the claimants' or beneficiaries' use of payments from the Fund, the Department does contemplate that the Special Master will have discretion to provide claimants with information regarding annuities or other financial planning devices or to offer structured awards with periodic payments.

Application of various laws and Executive Orders to this rulemaking.

Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. 553

This rule provides for compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured and to the personal representatives of those who were killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. In order to provide compensation to eligible claimants as expeditiously as possible, Congress set a short 90-day deadline for the issuance of these regulations. The Department did seek public input on the issues, but it was not possible for the Department to prepare and publish a proposed rule for notice and comment within that very short time period.

The APA provides that an agency need not go through proposed rulemaking and comment before issuing rules to implement benefits programs. 5 U.S.C. 553(a)(2). Moreover, the Department, in consultation with the Special Master, determined that taking the time to draft and publish a proposed rule for notice and comment before this rule took effect would have been impracticable in light of the short time between the enactment of the statute and the deadline for rulemaking, and also would have been contrary to the public interest, which strongly favors prompt disbursement of benefits. Accordingly, the Department has determined that there is "good cause" for exempting this rule from the provision of the Administrative Procedure Act that requires a notice of proposed rulemaking and the opportunity for public comment. 5 U.S.C. 553(b)(B).

For the same reasons, the Department also finds "good cause" for exempting this rule from the provision of the Administrative Procedure Act providing for a delayed effective date. 5 U.S.C. 553(d). Delaying the opportunity for eligible claimants to seek Advance Benefits or to file claims under the Act would be contrary to the public interest.

Congressional Review Act

The Administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs of the Office of Management and Budget has designated this interim final rule as a "major rule" as that term is defined by the Congressional Review Act ("CRA"), 5 U.S.C. 801 et. seq. Pursuant to section 808(2) of the CRA, the Department finds that "good cause" exists for establishing an effective date for this rule upon publication because delay would be impracticable in light of the short time between the enactment of the statute and the deadline for rulemaking, and also would be contrary to the public interest favoring prompt disbursement of benefits.

Privacy Act of 1974

The Department of Justice, Civil Division is establishing a new Privacy Act system of records entitled "September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001, JUSTICE/CIV-008." By law, regulations addressing certain administrative matters for the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 must be issued within the 90-day period established by Congress. The Privacy Act notice will be published with no routine uses, so that it will be effective on the date published. It is likely that amendments to this notice, including routine uses, will be published at a later date, with the opportunity to comment. In the interim, disclosures necessary to process claims will be made only with the written consent of claimants or as otherwise authorized under 5 U.S.C. 552a(b).

Regulatory Flexibility Act

These regulations set forth procedures by which the Federal government will award compensation benefits to eligible victims of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. Under 5 U.S.C. 601(6), the term "small entity" does not include the Federal government, the party charged with incurring the costs attendant to the implementation and administration of the Victims Compensation Fund. To the extent that small entities, including small government entities, will be economically affected by the promulgation of these regulations, such effects will likely be minimal. Further, the number of entities that will be affected will, in all probability, fall short of a "substantial number" of small entities. In fact, the Department believes that the promulgation of these rules will play a considerable role in reducing the amount of complex, private litigation, wherein a substantial number of small (and large) entities would undoubtedly be significantly impacted.

Accordingly, the Department has reviewed this rule in accordance with the Regulatory Flexibility Act (5 U.S.C. 605(b)) and by approving it certifies that this rule will not have a significant economic impact on a substantial number of small entities because it provides compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and compensation through a "personal representative" for those who were killed as a result of those crashes. This rule provides compensation to individuals, not to entities.

Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995

This rule will not result in the expenditure by State, local and tribal governments, in the aggregate, or by the private sector, of $100,000,000 or more in any one year, and it will not significantly or uniquely affect small governments. Therefore, no actions were deemed necessary under the provisions of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995.

Executive Order 12866 - Regulatory Planning and Review

This regulation has been drafted and reviewed in accordance with Executive Order 12866, "Regulatory Planning and Review," section 1(b), Principles of Regulation. The Department of Justice has determined that this rule is a "significant regulatory action" under Executive Order 12866, section 3(f), Regulatory Planning and Review, and accordingly this rule has been reviewed by the Office of Management and Budget.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Statement by the Special Master

The September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 is an unprecedented expression of compassion on the part of the American people to the victims and their families devastated by the horror and tragedy of September 11. The Act itself (specifically Title IV – Victim Compensation), and the attached regulations drafted and implemented pursuant to the Act, are designed to bring some measure of financial relief to those most devastated by the events of

Executive Order 13132 - Federalism

This regulation will not have substantial direct effects on the States, on the relationship between the national government and the States, or on distribution of power and responsibilities among the various levels of government. Therefore, in accordance with Executive Order 13132, it is determined that this rule does not have sufficient federalism implications to warrant the preparation of a Federalism Assessment. However, the Department of Justice has worked cooperatively with state and local officials in the affected communities in the preparation of this rule. Also, the Department individually notified national associations representing elected officials of the initial request for comment and will be taking similar action in connection with the interim final rule.

Subpart A - General; Eligibility

§ 104.1 Purpose.

This part implements the provisions of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001, Title IV of Public Law 107-42, 115 Stat. 230 (Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act) to provide compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and to the "personal representatives" of those who were killed as a result of the crashes. All compensation provided through the Fund will be on account of personal physical injuries or death.

§ 104.2 Eligibility definitions and requirements.

(a) Eligible claimants. The term eligible claimants means:

(1) Individuals present at the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site at the time of or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes and who suffered physical harm, as defined herein, as a direct result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes;

(2) The Personal Representatives of deceased individuals aboard American Airlines flights 11 or 77 and United Airlines flights 93 or 175; and

(3) The Personal Representatives of individuals who were present at the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site at the time of or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes and who died as a direct result of the terrorist-related aircraft crash.

(4) The term eligible claimants does not include any individual or representative of an individual who is identified to have been a participant or conspirator in the terrorist-related crashes of September 11.

(b) Immediate aftermath. The term immediate aftermath of the crashes shall mean, for purposes of all claimants other than rescue workers, the period of time from the crashes until 12 hours after the crashes. With respect to rescue workers who assisted in efforts to search for and recover victims, the immediate aftermath shall include the period from the crashes until 96 hours after the crashes.

(c) Physical harm.

(1) The term physical harm shall mean a physical injury to the body that was treated by a medical professional within 24 hours of the injury having been sustained or within 24 hours of rescue; and

(i) Required hospitalization as an in-patient for at least 24 hours; or

(ii) Caused, either temporarily or permanently, partial or total physical disability, incapacity or disfigurement.

(2) In every case not involving death, the physical injury must be verified by contemporaneous medical records created by or at the direction of the medical professional who provided the medical care.

(d) Personal Representative. The term Personal Representative shall mean the person determined to be the Personal Representative under § 104.4 of this part.

(e) Present at the site. The term present at the site (i.e., the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site) shall mean physically present at the time of the crashes or in the immediate aftermath:

(1) In the buildings or portions of buildings that were destroyed as a result of the airplane crashes; or

(2) In any area contiguous to the crash sites that the Special Master determines was sufficiently close to the site that there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm resulting from the impact of the aircraft or any subsequent fire, explosions, or building collapses (generally, the immediate area in which the impact occurred, fire occurred, portions of buildings fell, or debris fell upon and injured persons).

§ 104.3 Other definitions.

(a) Beneficiary. The term beneficiary shall mean a person entitled under the laws of the decedent's domicile to receive payments or benefits from the estate of or on behalf of the decedent on whose behalf the claim to the Fund was filed.

(b) Dependents. The Special Master shall identify as dependents those persons so identified by the victim on his or her federal tax return for the year 2000 unless:

(1) The claimant demonstrates that a minor child of the victim was born or adopted on or after January 1, 2001;

(2) Another person became a dependent in accordance with then-applicable law on or after January 1, 2001; or

(3) The victim was not required by law to file a federal income tax return for the year 2000.

(c) Spouse. The Special Master shall identify as the spouse of a victim the person reported as spouse on the victim's federal tax return for the year 2000 unless:

(1) The victim was married or divorced in accordance with applicable state law on or after January 1, 2001; or

(2) The victim was not required by law to file a federal income tax return for the year 2000.

(d) The Act. The Act, as used in this part, shall mean Public Law 107-42, 115 Stat. 230 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act"), 49 U.S.C. 40101 note.

(e) Victim. The term victim shall mean an eligible injured claimant or a decedent on whose behalf a claim is brought by an eligible Personal Representative.

§ 104.4 Personal Representative.

(a) In general. The Personal Representative shall be:

(1) An individual appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction as the Personal Representative of the decedent or as the executor or administrator of the decedent's will or estate.

(2) In the event that no Personal Representative or executor or administrator has been appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction, and such issue is not the subject of pending litigation or other dispute, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative for purposes of compensation by the Fund is the person named by the decedent in the decedent's will as the executor or administrator of the decedent's estate. In the event no will exists, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative for purposes of compensation by the Fund is the first person in the line of succession established by the laws of the decedent's domicile governing intestacy.

(b) Notice to beneficiaries. Any purported Personal Representative must, before filing an Eligibility Form, provide written notice of the claim (including a designated portion of the Eligibility Form) to the immediate family of the decedent (including, but not limited to, the decedent's spouse, former spouses, children, other dependents, and parents), to the executor, administrator, and beneficiaries of the decedent's will, and to any other persons who may reasonably be expected to assert an interest in an award or to have a cause of action to recover damages relating to the wrongful death of the decedent. Personal delivery or transmission by certified mail, return receipt requested, shall be deemed sufficient notice under this provision. The claim forms shall require that the purported Personal Representative certify that such notice (or other notice that the Special Master deems appropriate) has been given. In addition, as provided in § 104.21(b)(5) of this part, the Special Master may publish a list of individuals who have filed Eligibility Forms and the names of the victims for whom compensation is sought, but shall not publish the content of any such form.

(c) Objections to Personal Representatives. Objections to the authority of an individual to file as the Personal Representative of a decedent may be filed with the Special Master by parties who assert a financial interest in the award up to 30 days following the filing by the Personal Representative. If timely filed, such objections shall be treated as evidence of a "dispute" pursuant to paragraph (d) of this section.

(d) Disputes as to identity. The Special Master shall not be required to arbitrate, litigate, or otherwise resolve any dispute as to the identity of the Personal Representative. In the event of a dispute over the appropriate Personal Representative, the Special Master may suspend adjudication of the claim or, if sufficient information is provided, calculate the appropriate award and authorize payment, but place in escrow any payment until the dispute is resolved either by agreement of the disputing parties or by a court of competent jurisdiction. Alternatively, the disputing parties may agree in writing to the identity of a Personal Representative to act on their behalf, who may seek and accept payment from the Fund while the disputing parties work to settle their dispute.

§ 104.5 Foreign claims.

In the case of claims brought by or on behalf of foreign citizens, the Special Master may alter the requirements for documentation set forth herein to the extent such materials are unavailable to such foreign claimants.

§ 104.6 Amendments to this rule.

In the event that amendments are subsequently made to any section of this Part, claimants are entitled to have their claims processed in accordance with the provisions that were in effect at the time that their claims were submitted under § 104.21(d).

Subpart B - Filing for Compensation; Application for Advance Benefits

§ 104.21 Filing for compensation.

(a) Compensation form; "filing." Except for applications for Advance Benefits pursuant to § 104.22, no claim may be considered until the claimant has submitted both an "Eligibility Form" and either a "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or a "Death Compensation Form." A claim shall be deemed "filed" for purposes of section 405(b)(3) of the Act (providing that the Special Master shall issue a determination not later than 120 days after the date on which a claim is filed), and for any time periods in this part, when a Claims Evaluator determines that both the Eligibility Form and either a Personal Injury Compensation Form or a Death Compensation Form are substantially complete. Provided, however, that if a claimant files an Eligibility Form requesting Advance Benefits pursuant to § 104.22 of this part without filing either a "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or a "Death Compensation Form," the claim shall be deemed "filed" when the Claims Evaluator determines that the Eligibility Form is substantially complete, but the time period for determination and any time periods in this part shall be stayed or tolled as described in § 104.22(g) of this part.

(b) Eligibility Form. The Special Master shall develop an Eligibility Form that will require the claimant to provide information necessary for determining the claimant's eligibility to recover from the Fund.

(1) The Eligibility Form may require that the claimant certify that he or she has dismissed any pending lawsuit seeking damages as a result of the terrorist-related airplane crashes of September 11, 2001 (except for actions seeking collateral source benefits) within 90 days of the effective date of this part pursuant to section 405(c)(3)(B)(ii) of the Act and that there is no pending lawsuit brought by a dependent, spouse, or beneficiary of the victim.

(2) The Special Master may require as part of the notice requirement pursuant to § 104.4(b) that the claimant provide copies of a designated portion of the Eligibility Form to the immediate family of the decedent (including, but not limited to, the spouse, former spouses, children, other dependents, and parents), to the executor, administrator, and beneficiaries of the decedent's will, and to any other persons who may reasonably be expected to assert an interest in an award or to have a cause of action to recover damages relating to the wrongful death of the decedent.

(3) The Eligibility Form may require claimants to provide the following proof:

(i) Proof of death: Death certificate or similar official documentation;

(ii) Proof of presence at site: Documentation sufficient to establish presence at one of the crash sites, which may include, without limitation, a death certificate, records of employment, contemporaneous medical records, contemporaneous records of federal, state, city or local government, an affidavit or declaration of the decedent's or injured claimant's employer, or other sworn statement (or unsworn statement complying with 28 U.S.C. 1746) regarding the presence of the victim;

(iii) Proof of death on board aircraft: Death certificate or records of American or United Airlines or other sufficient official documentation;

(iv) Proof of physical harm: Contemporaneous medical records of hospitals, clinics, physicians, licensed medical personnel, or registries maintained by federal, state, or local government, and records of all continuing medical treatment;

(v) Personal Representative: Copies of relevant legal documentation, including court orders; letters testamentary or similar documentation; proof of the purported Personal Representative's relationship to the decedent; copies of wills, trusts, or other testamentary documents; and information regarding other possible beneficiaries as requested by the Eligibility Form;

(vi) Any other information that the Special Master deems necessary to determine the claimant's eligibility.

(4) The Special Master may also require waivers, consents, or authorizations from claimants to obtain directly from third parties tax returns, medical information, employment information, or other information that the Special Master deems relevant in determining the claimant's eligibility or award, and may request an opportunity to review originals of documents submitted in connection with the Fund.

(5) Application for Advance Benefits: The Eligibility Form shall include a section allowing claimants to indicate that they wish to apply for Advance Benefits. Claimants who apply for such Advance Benefits must certify on that Form that they have not yet received $450,000 in collateral source compensation if they are bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim with a spouse or dependent, $250,000 in collateral source compensation if they are bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim who was single with no dependents, or an amount in excess of their lost wages plus out-of-pocket medical expenses if they are an injured claimant. All such claimants also must state on the Form facts establishing financial hardship that would justify a determination that they are in need of Advance Benefits.

(6) The Special Master may publish a list of individuals who have filed Eligibility Forms and the names of the victims for whom compensation is sought, but shall not publish the content of any such form.

(c) Personal Injury Compensation Form and Death Compensation Form. The Special Master shall develop a Personal Injury Compensation Form that each injured claimant must submit. The Special Master shall also develop a Death Compensation Form that each Personal Representative must submit. These forms shall require the claimant to provide certain information that the Special Master deems necessary to determining the amount of any award, including information concerning income, collateral sources, benefits, and other financial information, and shall require the claimant to state the factual basis for the amount of compensation sought. It shall also allow the claimant to submit certain other information that may be relevant, but not necessary, to the determination of the amount of any award.

(1) Claimants shall, at a minimum, submit all tax returns that were filed for the years 1998, 1999, and 2000. The Special Master may, at his discretion, require that claimants submit copies of tax returns or other records for any other period of years he deems appropriate for determination of an award. The Special Master may also require waivers, consents, or authorizations from claimants to obtain directly from third parties medical information, employment information, or other information that the Special Master deems relevant to determining the amount of any award.

(2) Claimants may attach to the "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" any additional statements, documents or analyses by physicians, experts, September 11. In one important sense, the Fund symbolizes the commitment of the American people to those most in need. It is an example of how Americans rally around the less fortunate.

The attached regulations have two objectives: (1) to provide fair, predictable and consistent compensation to the victims of September 11 and their families throughout the life of the program; and (2) to do so in an expedited, efficient manner without unnecessary bureaucracy and needless demands on the victims. The regulations highlight a fast track administrative compensation program, eliminating the red tape, time and expense of a traditional lawsuit. Quick payment to eligible claimants characterizes this program.

The Fund offers the eligible claimant an alternative to litigation. To succeed in the courtroom, a victim of the September 11 tragedy, or his or her representative, would be compelled to litigate, probably for many years at excessive cost, and with all the uncertainty of result which is part of the litigation process. Among the hazards of such a court proceeding are: Would liability be demonstrated? Against whom? Would sufficient funds be available to pay in full any resulting tort award? Would the verdict, even if favorable, withstand appellate challenge?

Trade-offs are required in developing Fund procedures that are different than those in the more conventional lawsuit. It is possible to develop an alternative administrative scheme, providing speedy and efficient compensation, which will help bring some closure to the events of September 11. We should not require its victims to revisit the tragic events of September 11 over and over again during the pendency of a lawsuit in our courts.

In formulating the regulations, we heeded the instruction of the Attorney General to help the neediest of victims as quickly as possible. Accordingly, under these regulations, an eligible claimant can receive an immediate advance payment of $50,000 in cases involving death, or $25,000 in certain cases involving serious physical injury. These payments are downpayments only, advanced to provide immediate financial assistance to those in need.

advisors, or any other person or entity that the claimant believes may be relevant to a determination of compensation.

(d) Submission of a claim. Section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act provides that upon the submission of a claim under the Fund, the claimant waives the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any Federal or State court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for civil actions to recover collateral source obligations. A claim shall be deemed submitted for purposes of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act when the claim is deemed filed pursuant to § 104.21, regardless of whether any time limits are stayed or tolled.

(e) Provisions of information by third parties. Any third party having an interest in a claim brought by a Personal Representative may provide written statements or information regarding the Personal Representative's claim. The Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee may, at his or her discretion, include the written statements or information as part of the claim.

§ 104.22 Advance Benefits.

(a) Advance Benefits. Eligible Claimants may apply for immediate "Advance Benefits" in a fixed amount as follows:

- (1) $50,000 for Personal Representatives; and
- (2) $25,000 for injured claimants who meet the requirements of paragraph (d) of this section.

(b) Credit against award. The Advance Benefit shall be credited against any final compensation award so that the amount of the Advance Benefit is deducted from the final award under this program.

(c) Application for Advance Benefits. An otherwise eligible claimant may seek Advance Benefits to alleviate financial hardship faced by the claimant (or financial hardship faced by the beneficiaries of the decedent) by submitting an Eligibility Form described in § 104.21(b) and indicating thereon that he or she is applying for Advance Benefits.

(d) Eligibility for Advance Benefits. In the case of a Personal Representative, the claimant may be deemed eligible for Advance Benefits if a Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee determines that the claimant is eligible to recover under the Fund. In the case of an injured claimant, the claimant may be deemed eligible for Advance Benefits when the Special Master or his designee determines that the claimant is eligible to recover under the Fund and that the claimant's physical injury required hospitalization for one week or more.

(e) Authorization of payments.

(1) Payment in the amount described in paragraph (a) of this section will be authorized immediately upon a determination that the claimant is eligible for Advance Benefits and the claimant is:

(i) An injured claimant;

(ii) A Personal Representative who was the spouse of the deceased victim on September 11, 2001; or

(iii) A Personal Representative who has obtained the consent of the spouse of the deceased victim (or, if there is no surviving spouse, all of the dependents of the deceased victim) to file for Advance Benefits.

(2) (i) With respect to other Personal Representatives, payment will be authorized within 15 days after the determination that the claimant is eligible for Advance Benefits, provided that no other individual has asserted a colorable conflicting claim as the Personal Representative with respect to the decedent and the Personal Representative identifies and has given notice to the beneficiaries to whom such Advance Benefits will be distributed.

(ii) In the event that a colorable conflicting claim has been asserted, no Advance Benefit will be paid until a final eligibility determination has been made.

(f) Waiver of the right to sue. As set forth in § 104.21(d) of this part, a claim shall be deemed submitted for purposes of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act when a claimant has filed an Eligibility Form and is determined by a Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee to be an eligible claimant. The claimant will therefore have waived the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any Federal or State Court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for civil actions to recover collateral source obligations.

(g) Tolling of 120-day clock and other time periods. A claimant filing an Eligibility Form requesting Advance Benefits before filing a Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form will be deemed to have waived his right to commencement of the 120-day period in section 405(b)(3) of the Act (providing that the Special Master shall provide notice to the claimant of his determination within 120 days after the date on which a claim is filed). The 120-day period and all other time limitations in this part, except those applicable to Advance Benefit payments, shall be stayed or tolled until such time that a Claims Evaluator determines that the claimant's Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form is substantially complete.

Subpart C - Claim Intake, Assistance, and Review Procedures

§ 104.31 Procedure for claims evaluation.

(a) Initial review. Claims Evaluators shall review the forms filed by the claimant and either deem the claim "filed" (pursuant to 104.21(a)) or notify the claimant of any deficiency in the forms or any required documents.

(b) Procedural tracks. Each claim will be placed on a procedural track, described herein as "Track A" and "Track B," selected by the claimant on the Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form.

(1) Procedure for Track A. The Claims Evaluator shall determine eligibility and the claimant's presumed award pursuant to §§ 104.43 to 104.46 of this part and, within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination, the amount of the presumed award, and the right to request a hearing before the Special Master or his designee under § 104.33 of this part. After an eligible claimant has been notified of the presumed award, the claimant may either accept the presumed compensation determination as the final determination and request payment, or may instead request a review before the Special Master or his designee pursuant to § 104.33. Claimants found to be ineligible may appeal pursuant to § 104.32.

(2) Procedure for Track B. The Claims Evaluator shall determine eligibility within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, but shall not determine the claimant's presumed award; the Claims Evaluator shall notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination. Upon notification of eligibility, the claimant will proceed to a hearing pursuant to § 104.33. At such hearing, the Special Master or his designee shall utilize the presumptive award methodology as set forth in §§ 104.43 to 104.46 of this part, but may modify or vary the award if the claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award methodology. There shall be no review or appeal from this determination.

(c) Multiple claims from the same family. The Special Master may treat claims brought by or on behalf of two or more members of the same immediate family as related or consolidated claims for purposes of determining the amount of any award.

§ 104.32 Eligibility review.

Any claimant deemed ineligible by the Claims Evaluator may appeal that decision to the Special Master or his designee by filing an eligibility appeal on forms created by the office of the Special Master.

§ 104.33 Hearing.

(a) Supplemental submissions. The claimant may prepare and file Supplemental Submissions within 21 calendar days from notification of either the presumed award (Track A) or eligibility (Track B). The Special Master shall develop forms appropriate for Supplemental Submissions.

(b) Conduct of hearings. Hearings shall be before the Special Master or his designee. The objective of hearings shall be to permit the claimant to present information or evidence that the claimant believes is necessary to a full understanding of the claim. The claimant may request that the Special Master or his designee review any evidence relevant to the determination of the award, including without limitation: factors and variables used in calculating economic loss; the identity of the victim's spouse and dependents; the financial needs of the claimant; facts affecting noneconomic loss; and any factual or legal arguments that the claimant contends should affect the award. Claimants shall be entitled to submit any statements or reports in writing. The Special Master or his designee may require authentication of documents, including medical records and reports, and may request and consider information regarding the financial resources and expenses of the victim's family or other material that the Special Master or his designee deems relevant.

(c) Location and duration of hearings. The hearings shall, to the extent practicable, be scheduled at times and in locations convenient to the claimant or his or her representative. The hearings shall be limited in length to a time period determined by the Special Master or his designee, but generally not to exceed two hours. The claimant may elect whether the hearing shall be public or private.

(d) Witnesses, counsel, and experts. Claimants shall be permitted, but not required, to present witnesses, including expert witnesses. The Special Master or his designee shall be permitted to question witnesses and examine the credentials of experts. The claimant shall be entitled to be represented by an attorney in good standing, but it is not necessary that the claimant be represented by an attorney.

(e) Waivers. The Special Master shall have authority and discretion to require any waivers necessary to obtain more individualized information on specific claimants.

(f) Track A review of presumed award. For proceedings under Track A, the Special Master or his designee shall make a determination whether:

(1) There was an error in determining the presumptive award, either because the claimant's individual criteria were misapplied or for another reason; or

(2) The claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award.

(g) Determination. The Special Master shall notify the claimant in writing of the final amount of the award, but need not create or provide any written record of the deliberations that resulted in that determination. There shall be no further review or appeal of the Special Master's determination.

§ 104.34 Publication of awards.

In order to assist potential claimants in evaluating their options of either filing a claim with the Special Master or filing a lawsuit in tort, the Special Master reserves the right to publicize the amounts of some or all of the awards, but shall not publish the name of the claimants or victims that received each award. If published, these decisions would be intended by the Special Master as general guides for potential claimants and should not be viewed as precedent binding on the Special Master or his staff.

§ 104.35 Claims deemed abandoned by claimants.

The Special Master and his staff will endeavor to evaluate promptly any information submitted by claimants. Nonetheless, it is the responsibility of the claimant to keep the Special Master informed of his or her current address and to respond within the duration of this two-year program to requests for additional information. Claims outstanding at the end of this program because of a claimant's failure to complete his or her filings shall be deemed abandoned.

Subpart D - Amount of Compensation for Eligible Claimants.

§ 104.41. Amount of compensation.

As provided in section 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) of the Act, in determining the amount of compensation to which a claimant is entitled, the Special Master shall take into consideration the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant. The individual circumstances of the claimant may include the financial needs or financial resources of the claimant or the victim's dependents and beneficiaries. As provided in section 405(b)(6) of the Act, the Special Master shall reduce the amount of compensation by the amount of collateral source compensation the claimant (or, in the case of a Personal Representative, the victim's beneficiaries) has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. In no event shall an award (before collateral source compensation has been deducted) be less than $500,000 in any case brought on behalf of a deceased victim with a spouse or dependent, or $300,000 in any case brought on behalf of a deceased victim who was single with no dependents.

§ 104.42. Applicable state law.

The phrase "to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable state law," as used in the statute's definition of economic loss in section 402(5) of the Act, is interpreted to mean that the Special Master is not permitted to compensate claimants for those categories or types of economic losses that would not be compensable under the law of the state that would be applicable to any tort claims brought by or on behalf of the victim.

§ 104.43 Determination of presumed economic loss for decedents.

In reaching presumed determinations for economic loss for Personal Representatives bringing claims on behalf of decedents, the Special Master shall consider sums corresponding to the following:

- (a) Loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment. The Special Master, as part of the process of reaching a "determination" pursuant to section 405(b) of the Act, shall develop a methodology and publish schedules, tables, or charts that will permit prospective claimants to estimate determinations of loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment based upon individual circumstances of the deceased victim, including: the age of the decedent as of September 11, 2001; the number of dependents who survive the decedent; whether the decedent is survived by a spouse; and the amount and nature of the decedent's income for recent years. The decedent's salary/income in 1998-2000 shall be evaluated in a manner that the Special Master deems appropriate. The Special Master may, if he deems appropriate, take an average of income figures for each of those three years. The Special Master's methodology and schedules, tables, or charts shall yield presumed determinations of loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment for annual incomes up to but not beyond the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States for the year 2000. In cases where the victim was a minor child, the Special Master may assume an average income for the child commensurate with the average income of all wage earners in the United States.

(b) Medical expense loss. This loss equals the out-of-pocket medical expenses that were incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that were not paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). This loss shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the Personal Representative.

(c) Replacement services loss. For decedents who did not have any prior earned income, or who worked only part time outside the home, economic loss may be determined with reference to replacement services and similar measures.

(d) Loss due to death/burial costs. This loss shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the personal representative and includes the out-of-pocket burial costs that were incurred.

(e) Loss of business or employment opportunities. Such losses shall be addressed through the procedure outlined above in paragraph (a) of this section.

§ 104.44 Determination of presumed noneconomic losses for decedents.

The presumed noneconomic losses for decedents shall be $250,000 plus an additional $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent of the deceased victim. Such presumed losses include a noneconomic component of replacement services loss.

§ 104.45 Determination of presumed economic loss for claimants who suffered physical harm.

In reaching presumed determinations for economic loss for claimants who suffered physical harm (but did not die), the Special Master shall consider sums corresponding to the following:

(a) Loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment. The Special Master may determine the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the claimant, regarding the actual amount of work that the claimant has missed or will miss without compensation. Alternatively, the Special Master may determine the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment by relying upon the methodology created pursuant to § 104.43(a) and adjusting the loss based upon the extent of the victim's physical harm.

(1) Disability; in general. In evaluating claims of disability, the Special Master will, in general, make a determination regarding whether the claimant is capable of performing his or her usual profession in light of the injuries.

(2) Total permanent disability. With respect to claims of total permanent disability, the Special Master may accept a determination of disability made by the Social Security Administration as evidence of disability without any further medical evidence or review. The Special Master may also consider determinations of permanent total disability made by other governmental agencies or private insurers in evaluating the claim. The Special Master may require that the claimant submit an evaluation of the claimant's disability and ability to perform his or her occupation prepared by medical experts.

(3) Partial disability. With respect to claims of partial disability, the Special Master may consider evidence of the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to perform his or her usual occupation as well as the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to participate in usual daily activities.

(b) Medical Expense Loss. This loss equals the out-of-pocket medical expenses that were incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that were not paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). In addition, this loss equals future out-of-pocket medical expenses that will be incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that will not be paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). These losses shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the claimant.

(c) Replacement services loss. For injured claimants who did not have any prior earned income, or who worked only part-time outside the home, economic loss may be determined with reference to replacement services and similar measures.

(d) Loss of business or employment opportunities. Such losses shall be addressed through the procedure outlined above in paragraph (a) of this section.

§ 104.46 Determination of presumed noneconomic losses for claimants who suffered physical harm.

The Special Master may determine the presumed noneconomic losses for claimants who suffered physical harm (but did not die) by relying upon the noneconomic losses described in § 104.44 and adjusting the losses based upon the extent of the victim's physical harm. Such presumed losses include any noneconomic component of replacement services loss.

We were required, of course, to adhere to the language which Congress set out in the statute, including the provisions requiring that awards be offset by all collateral source compensation such as benefits from life insurance and other government programs. However, we did find ambiguity in the statute as to gifts provided to victims and their families by private charities. These regulations do not require that awards be offset by such private charitable assistance.

We have concluded that the purpose of the Act is not simply to examine economic and noneconomic harm, but also to provide compensation that is just and appropriate in light of claimants' individual circumstances. We have concluded that any methodology that does nothing more than attempt to replicate a theoretically possible future income stream would lead to awards that would be insufficient relative to the needs of some victims' families, and excessive relative to the needs of others. The statute specifies that individual circumstances beyond economic and noneconomic harm should be taken into account. It is our view that, absent extraordinary circumstances, awards in excess of $3 million, tax-free, will rarely be appropriate in light of individual needs and resources. At the same time, we want to ensure that victims' families are receiving at least a minimum level of resources to help meet their needs and rebuild their lives. Thus, we have concluded that the families of deceased victims should receive a combined total of at least $500,000 from this program, other state and federal programs, life insurance policies and other sources of compensation. Similarly, the baseline for single decedents should be $300,000. This ensures that every needy claimant's total compensation from this program and other sources will be at least equal to these threshold amounts.

In sum, the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 is an attempt by the American people to demonstrate their solidarity with, and generosity for, those injured by the terrible September 11 attack on our country. It provides an alternative compensation scheme to the traditional tort system, a method of providing substantial and quick compensation to those who elect to participate.

(a) Payments that constitute collateral source compensation. The amount of compensation shall be reduced by all collateral source compensation, including life insurance, pension funds, death benefit programs, and payments by federal, state, or local governments related to the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001.

(b) Payments that do not constitute collateral source compensation. The following payments received by claimants do not constitute collateral source compensation:

(1) The value of services or in-kind charitable gifts such as provision of emergency housing, food, or clothing; and

(2) Charitable donations distributed to the beneficiaries of the decedent, to the injured claimant, or to the beneficiaries of the injured claimant by private charitable entities; provided, however, that the Special Master may determine that funds provided to victims or their families through a private charitable entity constitute, in substance, a payment described in paragraph (a) of this section.

Subpart E - Payment of Claims

§ 104.51 Payments to eligible individuals.

Not later than 20 days after the date on which a determination is made by the Special Master regarding the amount of compensation due a claimant under the Fund, the Special Master shall authorize payment to such claimant of the amount determined with respect to the claimant.

§ 104.52 Distribution of award to decedent's beneficiaries.

The Personal Representative shall distribute the award in a manner consistent with the law of the decedent's domicile or any applicable rulings made by a court of competent jurisdiction. The Personal Representative shall, before payment is authorized, provide to the Special Master a plan for distribution of any award received from the Fund. Notwithstanding any other provision of these regulations or any other provision of state law, in the event that the Special Master concludes that the Personal Representative's plan for distribution does not appropriately compensate the victim's spouse, children, or other relatives, the Special Master may direct the Personal Representative to distribute all or part of the award to such spouse, children, or other relatives.

Subpart F - Limitations

§ 104.61 Limitation on civil actions.

(a) General. Section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act provides that upon the submission of a claim under the Fund, the claimant waives the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any federal or state court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except that this limitation does not apply to civil actions to recover collateral source obligations. The Special Master shall take appropriate steps to inform potential claimants of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act.

(b) Pending actions. Claimants who have filed a civil action or who are a party to such an action as described in paragraph (a) of this section may not file a claim with the Special Master unless they withdraw from such action not later than [PLEASE INSERT DATE WHICH IS 90 DAYS AFTER THE DATE OF PUBLICATION IN THE FEDERAL REGISTER].

§ 104.62 Time limit on filing claims.

§ 104.63 Subrogation.

Compensation under this Fund does not constitute the recovery of tort damages against a third party nor the settlement of a third party action, and the United States shall be subrogated to all potential claims against third party tortfeasors of any victim receiving compensation from the Fund. For that reason, no person or entity having paid other benefits or compensation to or on behalf of a victim shall have any right of recovery, whether through subrogation or otherwise, against the compensation paid by the Fund.

Subpart G - Measures to Protect the Integrity of the Compensation Program

§ 104.71 Procedures to prevent and detect fraud.

(a) Review of claims. For the purpose of detecting and preventing the payment of fraudulent claims and for the purpose of assuring accurate and appropriate payments to eligible claimants, the Special Master shall implement procedures to:

- (1) Verify, authenticate, and audit claims;
- (2) Analyze claim submissions to detect inconsistencies, irregularities, duplication, and multiple claimants; and
- (3) Ensure the quality control of claims review procedures.

(b) Quality control. The Special Master shall institute periodic quality control audits designed to evaluate the accuracy of submissions and the accuracy of payments, subject to the oversight of the Inspector General of the Department of Justice.

(c) False or fraudulent claims. The Special Master shall refer all evidence of false or fraudulent claims to appropriate law enforcement authorities.

APPENDIX TO PREAMBLE
SUMMARY OF PUBLIC COMMENTS SUBMITTED IN RESPONSE TO THE
NOVEMBER 5, 2001 NOTICE OF INQUIRY AND ADVANCE NOTICE OF RULEMAKING.

The following is a summary of the comments the Department of Justice ("the Department") received in response to its Notice of Inquiry published on November 5, 2001. The Notice of Inquiry sought input on numerous issues regarding potential regulations for the "September 11 Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund"), which was signed into law as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act")(the "Act").

Over 800 comments were received by the November 26, 2001 deadline established by the Department. Additionally, hundreds of comments have been received since that date. Every comment was – and continues to be – reviewed, considered, and catalogued into one or more of 72 different topics. While the following summary does not address every issue raised by commenters, it provides a general synopsis of the most often raised issues. The summary is not intended to be an exhaustive illustration of every issue contemplated by the Special Master or the Department. Indeed, as mentioned above, all comments were considered in the promulgation of these interim final rules. Finally, the summarized issues below are not arranged in any particular order of importance or level of volume.

The Effective Date of This Interim Final Rule

While the Act specified that this rule should be issued by December 21, 2001, it did not specify when they should become effective. Accordingly, the Department sought comment on this issue. The Department noted that the Administrative Procedure Act generally provides that rules not go into effect for at least 30 days absent "good cause."

Many commenters favored an immediate effective date so that claims could be filed right away. Many indicated an immediate need for relief and expressed frustration about their experiences with obtaining short-term assistance from other sources. However, some commenters thought an immediate effective date would be difficult to implement because the Special Master would need time to hire personnel and to set up the operation of the program before beginning to process claims.

A number of commenters suggested a compromise – making available some amount of short-term relief on an immediate basis to eligible claimants, and then commencing the more detailed review process necessary to provide a final award. Some suggested using flat amounts for these immediate awards, while another commenter suggested establishing an interest-free line of credit upon which families could draw. Another suggestion was that claims for immediate assistance be prioritized by "need."

Eligibility

In its November 5, 2001, Notice of Inquiry, the Department noted that section 405(b) of the statute requires the Special Master to determine whether a claimant is an "eligible individual" under section 405(c). "Eligibility," in turn, is defined by the Act to include: (1) individuals (other than the terrorists) aboard American Airlines flights 11 and 77 and United Airlines flights 93 and 175; or (2) individuals who were "present at" the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, or the site of the aircraft crash at Shanksville, Pennsylvania at the time or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes; or (3) personal representatives of deceased individuals who would otherwise be eligible. Moreover, to be eligible for an award, an individual must have suffered physical harm or death as a result of one of the terrorist-related air crashes. The Department sought comment on whether a Departmental regulation or a statement of policy by the Special Master would be appropriate to clarify these criteria, and if so, what those criteria should be.

The Department specifically invited comment on the following questions related to eligibility:

- How should "present at" be interpreted?
- Should the term "physical harm" be limited to serious injuries, as it is under some other no-fault compensation schemes, (see, e.g., N.Y. Ins. Law § 5102), or should it be construed more broadly?
- Should "physical harm" be limited to currently identifiable injuries?
- Can and should the program address latent, but not yet evident, harm?
- What duration of time is intended by the statutory phrase "immediate aftermath"?

(1) "Present At" And "Immediate Aftermath"

Many of the comments addressed the question of how to define the terms "present at the site" and "immediate aftermath," especially for purposes of those who were in New York at the time of the crashes. Some commenters urged a broad definition of these terms. They recommended that anybody in New York City be considered "present" because the debris and ash from the collapse of the World Trade Towers was widespread. Residents who live near the Ground Zero site in New York urged that they be eligible to recover under the Fund.

In contrast, other commenters argued for a narrower definition of the terms, asserting that the legislation intended to constrain the Fund to the locus of the buildings themselves, and to some very limited time period after the crashes. One comment recommended that "immediate aftermath" be defined as 48 hours after the crashes.

(2) Physical Harm

With respect to the nature of harm involved, some commenters asserted there should be no lower boundary for "nonserious" injuries. Of those who commented on the point, there were disagreements as to whether post-traumatic stress could be considered physical harm for purposes of filing a claim under the Fund. Certain commenters indicated that many people suffered substantial stress from witnessing the attacks and devastation and that they should be eligible to recover from the Fund. However, others argued that the Fund was not intended to cover psychological injury because the language of the statute specifically requires that the claimant suffer "physical harm." These commenters feared that recovery for stress-related injuries would open a Pandora's Box of less serious claims, which, in turn, may reduce the amount of compensation issued to those with the most serious physical injuries.

(3) Latent Harm

Some of the comments focused on the problem of latent injuries and diseases. Several commenters mentioned the coughing they have experienced as a result of exposure to the crash site in New York, and some nearby residents expressed concern about latent harm that might accrue from returning to their homes before the conclusion of the rescue and cleanup efforts. On the other hand, other commenters expressed concern about covering any harms that do not manifest themselves within the two-year lifetime of the Fund. They argued the Fund was not designed to compensate for latent harm primarily because the Fund only exists for two years, and many injuries may not become manifest until after that time.

(4) Eligibility of Victims And Survivors

Some commenters addressed the meaning of the word "victim." For example, some commenters urged that any unborn child who died should be considered eligible for an award as a victim. With respect to a different group of potential claimants, some commenters argued that illegal aliens should not be eligible for awards. However, other commenters did not think that legal status should preclude an award from the Fund.

With regard to claims on behalf of decedent victims, the comments evidenced a tremendous amount of confusion about whether the statute intended to cover only the losses incurred by the victim or the losses incurred by relatives and others. Some commenters noted that section 405 of the Act provides that only claims on behalf of the victim can be filed with the Fund, presumably leaving to the courts any claims by family members or partners on their own behalf. However, some commenters noted that section 403 of the Act states that its purpose is to provide compensation to any individual "or relatives of a deceased individual" who were killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes. The commenters further noted that various types of losses that may be compensated by the Fund pursuant to section 402 are akin to those that in civil actions are normally considered losses to survivors rather than to the victim.

Many commenters commented on the "eligibility" of particular "survivors" of the victim. Some suggested that only a spouse and children be considered "eligible." Others expressed concern as to whether parents, divorced spouses, children of a prior marriage, and others with a legal relationship would be "eligible" for an award under the Fund. In this regard, a number of comments specifically urged that non-married partners and others with a non-traditional relationship be considered "eligible" for an award. Some commenters opposed the idea of extending eligibility under the Fund to those in non-traditional relationships and argued for a narrower definition of eligibility.

Similarly, there were a number of comments about how "eligible" survivors would participate in the decision of whether to submit an application to the Fund, since in their view the application to the Fund would prohibit all of them from filing civil litigation. Some commenters explicitly suggested the law be interpreted to allow claims both on behalf of the decedent's estate and on behalf of any survivors, and suggested that such claims could be consolidated for decision before the Special Master. Others, however, specifically recommended that claims be limited to those on behalf of the estate. Many commenters, presuming that to be the case, recommended that the state courts be responsible for designating the representative to represent the estate, and that any award be distributed in accordance with the requirements of the will or state intestacy law.

Assistance To Claimants

In its Notice of Inquiry of November 5, 2001, the Department noted that it would appear that these requirements -- combined with the statutory time frame for the Special Master to reach a decision once a claim is filed -- contemplate a detailed form and filing. Accordingly, the Department invited comments on whether there are actions the Special Master should be required to take before he can accept a claim, or deem a claim "filed." The Department noted that the statute appeared to provide a very limited time frame for the Special Master to evaluate a claim before making a decision -- 120 days from the date a claim is filed. Accordingly, the Department sought comment on whether the Special Master should be permitted to dismiss a claim as not properly filed for lack of adequate supporting information and, if so, whether an individual should thereafter be permitted to refile the claim. Comments were also solicited on whether it would be advisable to include in the rules a procedure where the time for making a determination could be extended by agreement.

The Department also requested comment on the design and content of the claim forms in light of the statutory requirements, as well as on making the forms and their instructions readable and readily available. The Department also sought comment on how it should implement the statutory requirement that claimants be provided with assistance.

While most of those who commented supported maintaining firm deadlines, many commenters suggested that a claimant be able to "halt the clock" at the claimant's discretion for various purposes (e.g., to provide further evidence before the claim is evaluated, to allow more time to prepare for a hearing, or to allow for an administrative review of an initial award determination). Some suggested that the Special Master also have the authority not to start the clock until the claim contained sufficient information upon which an award determination could be made, or to halt the process for a set period of time to allow for review of an initial determination (provided that the claimant concurred with that decision).

A number of commenters stressed that a claimant should not lose the right to proceed with their claim due to an incomplete file. One commenter suggested the Special Master should have 14 days to review a claim before deciding if there is enough information to proceed. Several commenters suggested that claimants not be required to waive their right to litigation until it was determined the claimant was eligible to recover from the Fund. Similarly, some commenters stated they would have difficulty deciding whether or not to opt into the fund (and thus waive their right to sue) if they did not have some idea or presumption of the range of recovery they might expect from the Fund.

Many commenters urged the Department to establish a simplified procedure for initiating a claim with the Fund. They expressed frustration with the barrage of paperwork required to apply for assistance with other organizations. Some employers offered to provide information on behalf of their employees or survivors in an effort to reduce the paperwork burden on claimants. On the other hand, some noted that -- in light of the pro bono legal assistance that has been offered to the survivors -- claimants would have the option to have the assistance of an attorney to complete the forms. A number of commenters suggested a two-step claims process that would involve a simple initial submission, followed by a more asserted effort to collect additional information with the guidance of claimant assistance personnel from the Office of the Special Master.

A number of commenters had suggestions as to how the Special Master might assist claimants both in filing claims and completing the claims process. Many suggested that local offices be established in New York City, Washington D.C., Pennsylvania, and other cities that served as the domicile of victims. Some urged that outreach efforts be made to locate potential claimants and make them aware of the program's operations. Some mentioned that outreach should include multi-lingual assistance and publications. One group suggested that each Hearing Office have an Applicant's Assistant. Others suggested the Special Master hire victim advocates to assist claimants throughout the process.

The Claims Evaluation Process

The Department solicited comment on whether every claimant should be granted an oral hearing or whether paper hearings may be sufficient, and what types of oral hearing might be practicable in light of the statutory time frames.

Further, the Department sought comment on how evidence might be established and whether it is authorized to enforce requests made by the hearing officer to third parties for evidence that is necessary to a proceeding (e.g., evidence that might bear on whether all aspects of the claim file on which the decision will be based are accurate and complete). The Department sought comment on whether such proceedings should be recorded, whether such proceedings should be held in a location convenient to the claimant, how to deal with scheduling conflicts, and whether the opportunity for a hearing can be waived by a claimant through inaction or unwarranted delay.

Many commenters had opposing views on the role hearings should play in claims evaluation. Some commenters -- comparing this program to civil litigation -- viewed the hearings as essential to each and every claim. These commenters recommended hearings as a sort of "mini-trial," which would include rules of evidence (albeit relaxed rules) and adversarial questioning of witnesses. Using the same analogy, however, these commenters suggested that many claims could be "settled" based on only the paper submissions. Other comments suggested the hearings be more akin to an opportunity -- for those claimants who want to exercise it -- to make an informal oral presentation of their cases. They viewed the hearing as an opportunity to ensure that the decision maker was aware of their individual circumstances. Many of these commenters also suggested, for various reasons, that not all claimants would want a hearing. Some commenters suggested allowing claimants, upon filing a claim, to elect among different "tracks" -- one that would involve a hearing, and one that would not.

On the question of who should be hired as hearing officers, suggestions included retired trust executives, retired judges, attorneys experienced in handling high volume caseloads, and those experienced in civil litigation. Some commenters recommended there be a panel of hearing officers rather than one hearing officer. A number of commenters also recommended that claimants have the opportunity for review of their award to ensure that the decision maker was aware of their individual circumstances.

Many commenters submitted detailed procedural suggestions for the claims process. Among other things, these suggestions dealt with how eligibility and damages could be established through the use of affidavits under penalty of perjury in the event relevant documents had been lost as a result of the crashes themselves (e.g., designations of beneficiaries maintained by employers). Additionally, a number of commenters suggested the Special Master have the right to subpoena evidence required to make a determination.

(1) Meeting the 120-day Deadline

The Department invited comment on what means and mechanisms could be implemented to allow just compensation within the statutorily-mandated 120-day period for processing claims. In particular, the Department sought input on whether and how statistical methodologies should be developed and used as a starting point for decision, and whether publication of hypothetical or presumptive awards for classes of individuals would assist potential claimants in determining whether to opt into the Fund. For the most part, these comments were encapsulated in discussions regarding the calculation of damages; namely, economic and noneconomic losses.

(2) Calculating "Economic Losses"

The Department sought specific comment on how the Special Master should determine "economic losses." Although retaining experts is certainly not prohibited, the Special Master will not require any claimant to obtain legal counsel or other experts to assist in proving or presenting evidence of damages. The Special Master may, however, draw on available information from appropriate specialists in relevant fields to analyze economic losses. The Department invited comment regarding the necessary qualifications for such specialists, the data that should be utilized, the methodologies that should be employed, the documentation that should be required for every claimant, and how state law should bear upon such determinations. In addition, the Department invited comments on how to address the economic losses of individuals whose lost future income streams would have been highly contingent, variable, or unpredictable.

As expected, the range of comments on how best to calculate economic losses was widely varied. One group suggested a minimum value be calculated based on median income and remaining years of work, with flexibility to adjust the award after hearing all the evidence in individual cases. Similarly, certain comments suggested the use of a grid would be appropriate in certain circumstances to identify presumed awards. Others urged that no type of grid be used.

In terms of presumptive valuation, a few commenters recommended that awards mirror the amount a party could anticipate receiving from personal injury or wrongful death actions. Others disagreed. Many recognized the limited opportunities now available to potential plaintiffs filing claims in civil courts arising out of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. At least one commenter argued that the fairest approach in determining economic losses is that which insurance companies use in settling claims.

Some commenters indicated that economic awards should not be based on differences in individual income prior to the crash. Some suggested using a flat dollar figure per surviving family member (e.g., $250,000 for each survivor). Another suggested a flat amount for death at $100,000, injury at $50,000, and various other losses at slated dollar figures. On the other hand, some commenters felt the purpose of the program is to act as a substitute for civil damage actions, and that efforts should be made to determine and take into consideration the amount of income likely lost by a decedent. A large number of comments were received with respect to how to establish such income (e.g., average over a certain number of prior years, plus information supplied by employers on future prospects).

(3) Calculating "Noneconomic Losses"

The Department also sought comment as to "noneconomic losses." Most notably, the Department invited comments regarding whether, and in what manner, the Special Master can or should draw meaningful distinctions between both those victims who died in different locations and those who suffered similar injuries. The Department also invited comments on whether the Department should (as some have suggested) issue regulations determining the amount of noneconomic loss for classes of similarly situated individuals or whether, instead, the Special Master should determine all noneconomic loss on a detailed claim-by-claim basis. Further, the Department requested comment on what facts and circumstances should be considered in determining noneconomic losses for each individual, and what standards should be employed.

Comments regarding noneconomic losses were similarly varied. One commenting association suggested noneconomic losses -- such as pain and suffering -- should be standardized because such losses do not vary by income strata. Numerous commenters advocated a "fixed" noneconomic award, stating that the government should not attempt to draw distinctions in the amount of pain suffered by victims or their survivors. One commenter suggested the most equitable process for determining noneconomic awards would be an elective process. Under this proposed method, a claimant could elect to have the award calculated by use of a matrix, or alternatively, could present evidence at a hearing to establish the amount to which the claimant

Neither this Fund nor any monetary compensation can possibly provide a full measure of relief to those who have suffered as a result of September 11. But the Fund will provide appropriate compensation and some measure of comfort to those whose lives have been torn asunder by the events of September 11.

Background.

The following discussion provides background information and explanation of the regulations promulgated herein. Section A describes the statutory backdrop for the regulations; Section B discusses the Department's rulemaking procedures to date; Section C addresses Eligibility; Section D pertains to Advance Benefits; Section E discusses Final Awards made by the Fund; Section F describes the Special Master's claims evaluation process; and Section G relates to Assistance to Claimants. The text of the regulations is set forth following these explanatory sections. A catalog of public commentary is set forth thereafter as an Appendix. More detailed information regarding the program, including a flow chart of applicable procedures and a table of estimated or "presumed" awards, will be available on the Victims Compensation Fund website at www.usdoj.gov/victimcompensation.

A. The Statute.

The President signed the "September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund") into law on September 22, 2001, as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act") ("the Act"). The purpose of this Fund is to provide compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and compensation through a "personal representative" for those who died as a result of the crashes. Generally, eligibility is limited to: (1) individuals on the planes at the time of the crashes (other than the terrorists); and (2) individuals present at the World Trade Center, the Pentagon or the site of the crash in Pennsylvania at the time of the crashes or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes.

The Fund is designed to provide a no-fault alternative to tort litigation for individuals who were physically injured or killed as a result of the aircraft hijackings and crashes on September 11, 2001. Others who may have suffered losses as a result of those events (e.g., those without identifiable physical injuries but who lost employment) are not included in this special program. Indeed, compensation will be provided only for losses caused on account of personal physical injuries or death, even though the victims may have suffered other losses, such as property loss. For this reason, the Department and the Special Master anticipate that all awards believes he or she is entitled. A number of commenters argued that the statute necessitated an entirely individualized determination of noneconomic losses in every case. A group representing survivors of decedents suggested that noneconomic losses must be uncapped and based, in part, on the number and age of any surviving children or dependents, the current and future pain and suffering experienced by the victim's family, and the severity of pain suffered by the victim himself or herself.

(4) Taxation

A number of commenters raised questions about the taxability of various kinds of awards issued under the Fund. Several commenters asserted that compensation from the Fund should be nontaxable under federal law, similar to various types of tort awards. Another commenter stated that state victim compensation fund awards generally are not taxable, either by the state or the federal government. On the other hand, another commenter stated he did not see the purpose of distributing taxpayers' money to victims, and urged taxing the awards so as to return some of the money to the Treasury.

Collateral Sources

The Department sought comments on the issue of collateral sources. Although the Act requires that collateral sources be deducted from awards issued under the Fund (and explicitly outlines examples of certain types of collateral sources), the Department invited comment as to how the term "collateral source" should be defined.

(1) General Comments

Despite the explicit language in the Act, a number of commenters took issue with deducting any collateral sources whatsoever. Although many recognized that both the Department and the Special Master are bound to follow the language in the Act, they nonetheless argued that collateral sources are -- in many states -- not offset in wrongful death suits. Some urged that the type of collateral source offsets should be interpreted narrowly. A number of commenters also suggested that if collateral source benefits to a victim are to be offset, a counter-offset should be made for the premiums or contributions made by the victim to purchase various benefits. Others specifically suggested that only the value of collateral benefits funded by a victim's employer should be offset.

Many commenters, however, asserted that the program should not "unjustly enrich" the victims or their survivors, and supported the use of widespread offsets. Some of these comments mentioned that -- although the statute does not provide either a ceiling or floor for the amount of awards -- the Fund may have only a limited pool of resources to distribute to claimants (akin to the funds being collected and distributed by charitable organizations), and suggested the need to help those most in need. Other comments noted that unjust enrichment should not flow through tax-payer dollars. It was mentioned that many taxpayers -- who ultimately will provide the funds under the program -- also sent in charitable contributions not to unjustly enrich victims or their families, but, rather, solely to help them through these troubled times.

(2) "A claimant has received or is entitled to receive"

Some commenters specifically focused on the word "claimant" in the phrase "a claimant has received or is entitled to receive," and urged that any collateral source benefits not paid or to be paid directly to the claimant not be deducted from the award. These comments were often parallel to those concerning the question of whose losses are to be compensated under the Fund:

only those of the decedent (estate), or those of others as well. (See the discussion of Eligibility.)

A number of comments also focused on the words "entitled to receive." Some recommended that only those collateral benefits scheduled to be paid as a result of contractual or other clear obligations should be deducted from an award. Others recommended that only the present value of any future contingent awards be considered in making any offset.

(3) Life Insurance

Many commenters were frustrated that the Act requires life insurance proceeds to be deducted from awards. Many asserted that deducting life insurance will penalize those who planned ahead. One suggested that life insurance should only be offset if payable to a dependent of the victim, and another group of commenters indicated that only the sums received by the eligible applicant net of all taxes that exceed the premiums -- or other payments made by the applicant -- be deducted. A number suggested that if life insurance is to be offset, the premiums paid should be returned to the victim by reducing the amount of the benefit offset.

(4) Pensions

While similar concerns (as to life insurance) were raised in connection with pensions, a more common comment concerned the meaning of the term "pension." For example, some commenters noted that pensions are not normally considered to be "compensation for a loss" but are instead akin to savings.

(5) Workers Compensation And Victim Assistance Programs

One commenter pointed out that most of the victims may be eligible for workers' compensation benefits because they were killed while on the job. Further, with respect to those receiving benefits under New York law, the compensation insurer can terminate workers' compensation payments -- absent claimants obtaining consent to enter the Fund -- if benefits are being paid to the injured workers or survivors. New York State legal authorities confirmed the noteworthiness of this issue, and recommended that workers' compensation payments not be considered a collateral source to this extent.

With respect to state victim assistance funds, one commenter noted that 42 U.S.C. § 10602(e) -- which generally provides that state crime victim boards may refuse to pay out benefits if another Federal program is paying benefits -- was explicitly amended to exclude payments made under the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001. The commenter suggested that some programs covered under that code provision -- that have already made payments -- may be entitled to reimbursement as a result.

(6) Charitable Contributions

Many victims of the terrorist-related crashes on September 11, 2001, have or may receive support from special funds set up to assist them, as well as from special programs established by some of their employers to share future profits and the like. Accordingly, whether to reduce Fund awards by the amount of such contributions was one of the issues given the most attention in the comments. Notably, this issue was discussed in a number of news articles at about the time the Notice of Inquiry was issued.

Commenters were heavily divided on this issue. Many were strongly opposed to reducing awards by the amount of charity funding received. This includes some commenters who donated to charities established for this purpose, as well as employers who established funds to help the families of the victims. Many insisted that funds collected by employers solely for the purpose of compensating victims of the September 11 attacks should not be deemed a collateral source. Many drew a distinction between funds provided for short-term assistance and need, and those designed to compensate victims for their losses.

On the other hand, a number of comments from those who contributed money to various charities viewed the purposes of the charities and the Fund as one and the same; namely, compensating the victims. These commenters asserted they had not intended making contributions to unjustly enrich the families, and would hesitate to make such contributions in the future if their help turns out only to ensure persons maintain a certain lifestyle.

A number of commenters also pointed to the practical difficulties of trying to establish what claimants may have received from charities. Some suggested the Fund should have access to any database of charitable contributions, including one that was reported to be under consideration in New York.

After discussing these factors, some commenters suggested that the Special Master only offset charitable contributions over a certain amount. A few commenters suggested only offsetting charities set up for longer term assistance to the victims (e.g., tuition funds or scholarships for the children of all the victims).

Payment of Awards

Some commenters expressed the view that payments by the fund should be in the form of "structured settlements" or annuities rather than in lump sum. One commenter suggested payments to children should go to a trustee for the benefit of the child. However, other commenters argued for lump sum payments and objected to the government placing any restrictions on the claimants' award.

Limitations on Fees for Assistance And Payment by the Special Master

The Department requested comments on whether the Special Master has the authority to limit the types and amounts of fees that can be charged by counsel, accountants, experts or others who are retained by claimants to assist them to file and pursue compensation claims, and whether such fees can and should be paid by the Special Master directly out of compensation awards. The Department also solicited comments on what limitations, if any, the rules should impose on non-attorney, non-claimant representatives' participation in filing claims.

A number of commenters noted that the right to be represented by counsel is provided by the statute, that not all claimants would be comfortable using pro-bono counsel to represent their interests, and that payment of attorneys' fees is necessary to ensure representation by counsel of choice. Some of these commenters suggested, however, that fees could be limited so as not to exceed 10% of the award to claimant. Paradoxically, some commenters opposed using any amount of money from the Fund to pay legal fees.

from the Fund will be free of federal taxation. See I.R.C. § 104(a)(2) (stating that damages received "on account of personal physical injuries or physical sickness" are excludable from gross income for purposes of federal income taxation).

A claimant who files for compensation waives any right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any federal or state court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for actions to recover collateral source obligations.

Determinations on eligibility and the amount of compensation are to be made by the Special Master. After determining whether an individual is an eligible claimant under the Act, the Special Master is to determine the amount of compensation to be awarded based upon the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant.

The law also provides that the Special Master is to make a final determination on any claim within 120 days from when the claim was filed and, if an award is made, to authorize payment within 20 days thereafter. The determinations of the Special Master are final and are not reviewable by any court. Claims with the Fund must be filed on or before two years after the effective date of these regulations, i.e. [insert date 2 years from date of this publication in the FEDERAL REGISTER]. Payments from the Fund are made by the United States Government, which in turn obtains the right of subrogation to each award.

Pursuant to the Act, regulations addressing certain administrative matters must be issued within 90 days of enactment. Section 407 of the Act provides that the Department, in consultation with the Special Master, promulgate regulations on four matters by December 21, 2001:

- (1) Forms to be used in submitting claims;
- (2) The information to be included in such forms;
- (3) Procedures for hearing and the presentation of evidence; and
- (4) Procedures to assist an individual in filing and pursuing claims under this title.

In addition, section 407 authorizes, but does not require, the Department to issue additional rules to implement the program. This Interim Final Rule addresses issues beyond the four specifically required by the Act in order to create a program that will be efficient, will treat similarly situated claimants alike, and will allow potential claimants to make informed decisions regarding whether to file claims with the Fund. Nonetheless, the Department recognizes that it cannot anticipate all of the issues that will arise over the course of the program and that there will inevitably be many difficult issues that the Special Master will have to resolve in the course of making determinations on individual claims.

B. Rulemaking history to date.

On November 5, 2001, the Department requested public input on a number of issues. 66 FR 55901. The Department noted that, at that time, the Special Master had not yet been appointed, but that it wanted as much public comment as feasible before issuing the regulations by December 21, 2001. On November 26, 2001, the Attorney General appointed Kenneth R. Feinberg as Special Master. As called for by the Act, this interim final rule is promulgated in consultation with the Special Master.

The Department received more than 800 comments in response to the Department's Notice of Inquiry. Some were very brief and only spoke to a single issue; others responded to the Department's questions on a point by point basis. Still others contained detailed analyses, recommendations and even proposed regulatory language.

The range of commenters was very broad. Some commenters identified themselves as citizens, taxpayers or law professors, and many identified themselves as individuals who had contributed to charities for those impacted by the terrorist crashes. Many other commenters identified themselves as members of victims' families, partners or close friends, including some from organizations and groups of survivors. Several commenters identified themselves as employers who lost a significant number of employees in the crashes. A number of commenters identified themselves as residents of housing near "Ground Zero" in New York.

In addition, the Department received comments from many organizations including the American Insurance Association, the American Arbitration Association, the American Bar Association, Trial Lawyers Care, New York Trial Lawyers' Association, New York City Bar Association, Massachusetts Bar Association, National Center for Victims of Crime, National Association of Crime Victim Compensation Boards, the Oklahoma Crime Victim Compensation Board, Consumers Union, Public Citizen, the National Right To Life Committee, the Lambda Legal Defense & Education Fund, the American Civil Liberties Union, the Association of Flight Attendants, the Council on Foundations, the Nonprofit Coordinating Committee of New York, Independent Sector, the Alternative Dispute Resolution of the Federal Bar Association, the Alliance of Fiduciary Consultants, and the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission.

Individual members of Congress, groups of members, and members of the Senate leadership also provided comments. Further, joint comments were submitted on behalf of the New York City Mayor, the New York Governor, and the New York Attorney General, by members of the New York Assembly, and by the Attorney General of Connecticut.

Comments were also submitted by United Airlines and American Airlines, and from various individuals and companies who identified themselves as having expertise or experience in the administration of claims programs.

The Department has read every submission it received in response to this notice, from handwritten notes to scholarly discussions. The Department wants to express its appreciation for the time and careful thought reflected in those submissions.

While the Department has reviewed every submission it received, it will not regulate on every topic addressed in those comments. Over 70 separate topics were identified; almost two dozen full size notebooks are necessary to organize all of the comments by topic. All of the comments will be retained by the Department for subsequent consideration when it reviews comments on this interim final rule, and the comments will remain posted on the Department's web site where they may be reviewed by the public. The Department was pleased to see that some comments responded to others placed on the web site, and hopes this facility will continue to be of interest to the public.

It is not feasible to repeat here all of the suggestions received in the comments, let alone directly respond to each. The Appendix to this interim final rulemaking highlights some of the points raised by commenters in order to indicate the range of views received on how various issues should be approached.

C. Eligibility.

Section 405(b) of the Act requires the Special Master to determine whether a claimant is an "eligible individual" under section 405(c). "Eligibility," in turn, is defined by the Act to include: (1) individuals (other than the terrorists) aboard American Airlines flights 11 and 77 and United Airlines flights 93 and 175; (2) individuals who were "present at" the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, or the site of the aircraft crash at Shanksville, Pennsylvania at the time or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes; or (3) personal representatives of deceased individuals who would otherwise be eligible. Moreover, to be eligible for an award, an individual must have suffered physical harm or death as a result of one of the terrorist-related air crashes. This interim final rule addresses eligibility by defining the terms "present at the site," "immediate aftermath," "physical harm," and "personal representative."

"Present at the site": This rule defines the term "present at the site" (i.e. the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville site) to mean physically present at the time of the crashes or immediate aftermath:

(1) In the buildings or portions of buildings that were destroyed as a result of the airplane crashes; or

(2) In any area contiguous to the crash sites that the Special Master determines was sufficiently close to the site that there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm resulting from the impact of the aircraft or any subsequent fire, explosions, or collapse of buildings (generally, the immediate area in which the impact occurred, fire occurred, portions of buildings fell, or debris fell upon and injured persons).

There are several reasons for this geographic limitation. First, this geographic limitation comports with the plain meaning of the statutory term "present at." Second, this geographic limitation is consistent with the further statutory requirement of physical injury or death, because the zone designated is that in which there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm from falling debris, explosions, or fire.

"Immediate aftermath": This rule defines the term "immediate aftermath" of the crashes to mean, for purposes of all claimants other than rescue workers, the period of time from the crashes until 12 hours after the crashes. This time frame appears to cover all of those who suffered physical injury or death, with the exception of rescue workers.

With respect to rescue workers who assisted in efforts to search for and recover victims, the regulations define "the immediate aftermath" to include the period from the crashes until 96 hours after the crashes. The regulations provide for this longer time period for rescue workers in recognition of their heroic efforts and their selfless reasons for being at the sites, and responds to a request by the Mayor of New York City that the program recognize the high level of danger and difficulty during the first four days of rescue operations.

"Physical harm": This rule defines the term "physical harm" to mean an objectively verifiable physical injury that was treated by a medical professional within 24 hours of the injury having been sustained or within 24 hours of rescue and either required hospitalization as an in-patient for at least 24 hours or caused, either temporarily or permanently, partial or total physical disability, incapacity, or disfigurement.

There are several reasons for this definition. The statutory term "physical harm" indicates that Congress did not intend for this Fund to compensate those who suffered only emotional harm or property damage. The statutory term "physical harm" also indicates that Congress did not intend for this Fund to cover those who face only a risk of future injury (i.e. latent harm that does not fully manifest itself within the statutory time period for this Fund). Indeed, because participation in this Fund precludes claimants from recovering through tort litigation, those with latent injuries that later became manifest would likely be undercompensated if they sought compensation now from the Fund before the injuries became manifest. Conversely, those who recovered for latent injuries that did not later become manifest could be overcompensated if they recovered from the Fund. While Congress might later consider whether an administrative program for latent harm caused by the September 11, 2001 terrorist-related aircraft crashes may be appropriate, the language of the statute that created this Fund does not contemplate awards for that purpose.

"Personal Representative": Section 405(c)(2)(C) provides that in the case of an individual who is deceased but who otherwise meets the other criteria for eligibility, a claim can be filed by the Personal Representative of the decedent. Section 405(c)(3)(A) provides that no more than one claim may be submitted by an individual or on behalf of a deceased individual.

In many or most cases, the identity of the "Personal Representative" will not be in dispute. Where there are disputes, two issues arise: (1) what are the rules for determining who is the Personal Representative?; and (2) who should apply the rules and resolve the dispute?

As to the first issue, the regulations rely on state law. Subject to certain contingencies, this rule defines the term "Personal Representative" to mean an individual appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction as the Personal Representative of the decedent or as the executor or administrator of the decedent's will or estate. In the event that no Personal Representative or executor or administrator has been appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction, and such issue is not the subject of pending litigation or other dispute, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative is the person named by the decedent in the decedent's will as the executor or administrator. In the event no will exists, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative is the first person in the line of succession established by the laws of the state of the decedent's domicile governing intestacy.

Reliance on state law is necessary in part because those who file for recovery under the Fund waive their rights to recover through litigation, in which state law would determine the identity of the appropriate representatives of the decedent, or the decedent's estate, to bring suit. Thus, if the identity of Personal Representatives for purposes of this Fund were determined by federal regulation, there could be many situations in which the representative as defined by state law would choose litigation while the Personal Representative as defined by federal regulation would seek to recover from the Fund.

The second issue raises questions of program administration. Disputes between relatives, former spouses and other interested parties can be exceptionally fact-intensive and time-consuming. Indeed, state courts often spend considerable time and resources resolving such matters. The Special Master cannot accomplish his statutory duties if bogged down with these types of complex disputes. Nor would it be advisable for the Special Master to attempt to step in and supplant state court practice or the testamentary intent of decedents. Consequently, the rule provides that the Special Master has no obligation to arbitrate, litigate or otherwise resolve disputes as to the identity of the Personal Representative. Instead, to ensure that funds are not needlessly tied up due to disputes regarding the identity of the Personal Representative, the regulations provide that the disputing parties may agree in writing to the identity of a Personal Representative to act on their behalf, who may seek and accept payment from the Fund while those disputing parties work to settle their dispute. In appropriate cases, the Special Master may determine an award, but place the payment in escrow until the dispute regarding the Personal Representative is finally resolved.

Finally, the determination of the Personal Representative is not the same question as the determination of who ultimately will receive the award. In that regard, this rule provides that the Personal Representative shall distribute the award in a manner consistent with the law of the decedent's domicile or any applicable rulings made by a court of competent jurisdiction.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Office of the Attorney General

28 CFR Part 104

CIV 104P; AG Order No.

RIN: 1105-AA79

September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001

ACTION: Interim final rule with request for comments.

SUMMARY: Shortly after the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, the President signed the "September 11 Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund") into law as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act") (the "Act"). The Act authorizes compensation to any individual (or the personal representative of a deceased individual) who was physically injured or killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes on that day. The Act provides that the Fund will be administered by a Special Master appointed by the Attorney General. On November 26, 2001, the Attorney General appointed Kenneth R. Feinberg as Special Master.

The Department of Justice, in consultation with the Special Master, is issuing certain procedural rules so the Special Master may commence operations of the program as soon as practicable. In order to allow the Special Master to begin distributing funds, the Department is issuing this rule as an "Interim Final Rule" that will have the force and effect of law immediately upon publication. This rule is designated "interim," however, because the Department is also seeking further comment for a period of 30 days as part of its further review and may expand or adjust aspects of the rule after receiving additional comments.

However, in order to assure that the families of needy victims receive adequate compensation, the regulations further provide that the Personal Representative shall, before payment is authorized, provide to the Special Master a plan for distribution of any award received from the Fund. Notwithstanding any other provision of these regulations or any other provision of state law, in the event that the Special Master concludes that the Personal Representative's plan for distribution does not appropriately compensate the victim's spouse, children, or other relatives, the Special Master may direct the Personal Representative to distribute all or part of the award to such spouse, children, or other relatives.

D. Advance Benefits

In order to comply with the Attorney General's November 26, 2001 instructions to the Special Master to pay benefits to eligible claimants as quickly as possible, these regulations permit claimants to seek immediate "Advance Benefits" in the fixed amount of $50,000 in the case of deceased individuals and $25,000 in the case of severely injured individuals who required hospitalization for one week or more.

To qualify for advance benefits, applicants must complete a short form (the "Eligibility Form") identifying basic eligibility and indicating that advance benefits would assist them in confronting current or immediate financial hardships. Such forms will be made available at claims intake centers as they are established, in response to telephone requests (888-714-3385, 202-305-1352, TDD: 888-560-0844), and on the Victims Compensation Fund website at www.usdoj.gov/victimcompensation.

Eligible claimants may apply for and receive advance benefits and then file their lengthier "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" at any time within the two-year time frame for filing claims under the program. This will allow needy eligible claimants to obtain prompt advance payments even though they may need more time to collect full information regarding the amount of compensation they seek. The 120-day period for determination of compensation will be stayed or tolled until the claimant files the completed "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" needed to allow the Special Master to determine the amount of the final award. However, once a claimant applies for Advance Benefits and is deemed eligible to recover under the Fund, the claimant will be deemed to have waived the right to file a civil action in state or federal court for damages sustained as a result of the September 11 attacks.

Advance benefits will be treated as advance payments on ultimate awards from the Fund. Thus, the amount of any advance benefits received will be deducted from the claimant's subsequent award.

E. Final awards made by the Fund.

Section 405(b) of the Act provides that the Special Master shall compensate eligible claimants based on the harm to the claimant (including both economic loss and noneconomic losses), the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant. The Act further provides that the Special Master shall determine the claimant's eligibility and the amount of compensation within 120 days.

The Special Master and the Department have studied the language of the Act, the varying public comments, evidence and data about the many victims of the September 11 attacks, and economic and demographic studies and data in fashioning the interim final rule. After this careful consideration, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that the following principal objectives should guide any determination of economic and noneconomic losses.

The first objective is that the process should be efficient, straightforward, and understandable to the claimants. This objective is based in part upon the statutory requirement that the Special Master review each claim and make an award determination within 120 days of filing. More important, however, is that claimants be able to enter the program -- or choose not to enter the program -- with an understanding of how their claims will be treated. This is especially important because the Act provides that, upon submission of a claim, a claimant waives the right to file a civil action for damages sustained as a result of the September 11 attacks. For claimants to make an informed decision regarding this waiver, they should have some understanding of how their award will be calculated and how much they would receive from the Fund should they decide to file a claim.

The second objective is that each claimant should, to the greatest extent possible, be treated fairly based on the claimant's own individual circumstances and relative to other claimants. While the circumstances of death for many victims will differ, those circumstances will in many cases be unknowable. In principle, similarly situated claimants should not receive dramatically differing treatment.

After careful consideration, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that, in order best to achieve these principal objectives, the Special Master should develop a methodology for calculating presumed economic and noneconomic losses that is based on readily identifiable individual circumstances for each claimant, such as age, prior income levels, marital status, and the number and ages of the victim's dependents. A methodology for determining presumed economic and noneconomic losses will also assist the Special Master in making fair and appropriate compensation determinations swiftly and efficiently within the time frame permitted by the Act.

In order to enable claimants to make informed decisions regarding whether to submit a claim under the Fund and, if so, whether to submit evidence of extraordinary individual circumstances that could justify departure from the presumed awards, the interim final rule directs the Special Master to publish schedules, tables, or charts of presumed determinations for economic and noneconomic losses. While these schedules, tables, or charts cannot cover every possible claimant (e.g., injured claimants), they are extensive and detailed enough to provide the majority of potential claimants with a general dollar range into which their awards may fall.

Nonetheless, the Special Master and the Department recognize that it will be impossible to fashion a presumptive methodology that will take into account all of the individual facts and circumstances for every claimant. Rather, some claimants may have extraordinary individual circumstances that justify departure from the presumed awards. Thus, the interim final rule provides that claimants may request that the Special Master depart from the presumed economic and noneconomic losses based upon a demonstration of extraordinary circumstances that the presumed award methodology does not adequately address.

Economic loss: Determination of economic loss requires a prediction about each claimant's future. This assessment will be, by its nature, somewhat speculative. While the determination of economic loss should be based upon facts regarding the individual victim where those facts are available, some facts cannot be predicted on an individualized basis.

The regulations also provide that the Special Master's schedules, tables, or charts should identify presumed determinations of economic loss up to a salary level commensurate with the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States. The Department recognizes that projecting earnings over worklife for people with extraordinary annual incomes is a very complex exercise, often requiring a detailed evaluation of variable and often complex formulae for nonvariable income, differing work life expectations, often highly volatile industries or markets, and other factors that are not often subject to easy generalization. We have also concluded that the purpose of the Act is not simply to examine economic and noneconomic harm, but also to provide compensation that is just and appropriate in light of the financial needs and resources of claimants. Any methodology that does nothing more than attempt to replicate a theoretically possible future income stream would lead to awards that would be insufficient relative to the needs of some victims' families, and excessive relative to the needs of others. Therefore, a claimant should not assume that he or she will receive an award greater than the presumed award simply because the victim had an income that exceeded the income for the 98th percentile. Indeed, the Act's requirement that the Special Master consider "the individual circumstances of the claimant" indicates that the Special Master may consider a particular claimant's financial needs and resources, just as the Department and the Special Master considered the needs of the claimants in concluding that no claimant bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim should receive less than $500,000 or $300,000 before collateral source offsets.

If a claimant seeks review of a presumed award, the Special Master may consider a range of information, including demographic information on retirement trends for high wage earners, the individual's historical expenses, savings, and any other factors he deems relevant, including economic trends, information available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Census Bureau and other entities on average income and retirement age for the victim's profession or even for the victim's former employer. Claimants should not expect awards grossly in excess of the highest awards listed on the Special Master's presumed award chart, as the individual circumstances of the wealthiest and highest-income claimants will often indicate that multi-million dollar awards out of the public coffers are not necessary to provide them with a strong economic foundation from which to rebuild their lives.

The Special Master and the Department recognize that the extent of physical injury for those victims who survived the September 11 attacks may vary to a degree that does not lend itself to a schedule, table, or chart. If the claimant's injury causes only a temporary disability, the Special Master may consider evidence regarding the length of time the claimant was absent from his employment in determining the appropriate compensation for economic loss. For those victims who suffered permanent physical disability, the Special Master may rely upon his economic loss methodology, but adjust the award based upon the extent of the physical disability. In evaluating claims of disability, the Special Master will, in general, make a determination regarding whether the claimant is capable of performing his or her usual profession in light of the injuries.

With respect to claims of total permanent disability, the Special Master may accept a determination of disability made by the Social Security Administration as evidence of disability without any further medical evidence or review. The Special Master may also consider determinations of permanent total disability made by other governmental agencies or private insurers in evaluating the claim. The Special Master may require an evaluation of the claimant's disability and ability to perform his or her occupation from medical experts.

With respect to claims of partial disability, the Special Master may consider evidence of the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to perform his or her usual occupation as well as the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to participate in usual daily activities.

Noneconomic losses: Each person who was killed or injured in the September 11 attacks suffered grievous harm, and each person experienced the unspeakable events of that day in a unique way. Some victims experienced terror for many minutes, as they were held hostage by terrorists on an airplane or trapped in a burning building. Some victims had no warning of what was coming and died within seconds of a plane hitting the building in which they worked. While these circumstances may be knowable in a few extraordinary circumstances, for the vast majority of victims these circumstances are unknowable.

After extensive fact finding, public outreach, and review of public comments, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that the most rational and just way to approach the imponderable task of placing a dollar amount upon the pain, emotional suffering, loss of enjoyment of life, and mental anguish suffered by the thousands of victims of the September 11 attacks is to assess the noneconomic losses for categories of claimants. The most obvious distinction is between those who died and those who suffered physical injury but survived.

The regulations therefore set a presumed award for noneconomic losses sustained. For those victims who died as a result of the September 11 aircraft crashes, the presumed noneconomic losses will be $250,000, plus an additional $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent of the deceased victim. That $250,000 figure is roughly equivalent to the amounts received under existing federal programs by public safety officers who are killed while on duty, or members of our military who are killed in the line of duty while serving our nation. See 38 U.S.C. § 1967 (military personnel); 42 U.S.C. § 3796 (Public Safety Officers Benefit Program). The latter figures -- $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent -- include a noneconomic component of "replacement services loss."

For those victims who suffered physical injury but survived the September 11 attacks, the Special Master may establish a methodology for estimating their noneconomic losses. The Special Master may determine that it is appropriate to give some percentage of the noneconomic loss award given for victims who died, based upon the extent of the injury.

The Special Master and the Department recognize, however, that no presumed award can take into account all of the unique individual circumstances of each claimant. Accordingly, as noted above, claimants may either accept the presumed award or instead attempt to demonstrate in a hearing before the Special Master extraordinary circumstances that justify departure from the presumed award.

Collateral Sources: Section 405(b)(6) of the Act provides that the Special Master shall

reduce the amount of compensation by the amount of the collateral source compensation "a claimant has received or is entitled to receive" as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. The interim final rule provides that collateral sources will include life insurance, pension funds, death benefit programs, and payments by federal, state, or local governments related to the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. While many public commenters voiced strong opposition to the inclusion of some or all of these as collateral source compensation, the Act expressly includes each one within the definition of "collateral sources."

At the same time, the Act does not address whether certain other types of payments constitute collateral source compensation. The interim final rule provides that the following are not collateral source compensation:

(1) The value of services or in-kind charitable gifts such as provision of emergency housing, food, or clothing; and

(2) Charitable donations distributed to the beneficiaries of the decedent, to the injured claimant, or to the beneficiaries of the injured claimant by private charitable entities; provided, however, that the Special Master may determine that funds provided to victims or their families through a private charitable entity constitute, in substance, a collateral source as described above.

The Department has concluded that charitable contributions should not be considered collateral source compensation within the meaning of the Act because, among other reasons, such charitable contributions are different in kind from the collateral sources listed in the Act. Moreover, because the collateral offset only applies to collateral source compensation that the claimant has received or is entitled to receive, deducting charitable awards from the amount of compensation would have the perverse effect of encouraging potential donors to withhold their giving until after claimants have received their awards from the Fund.

F. The claims evaluation process.

Section 405(b)(4) of the Act provides that a claimant, after the filing of the claim, has the right to present evidence to the Office of the Special Master. The statute specifically provides that the claimant has the right to present witness statements and documents, the right to obtain legal counsel, and such other due process rights as are determined to be appropriate by the Special Master.

The interim final regulations provide claimants with a choice of two Procedural Options -- Track A or Track B. If a claimant selects Track A, the Claims Evaluator will determine eligibility and the claimant's presumed award and, within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination, the amount of the presumed award, and the right to request a hearing before the Special Master or his designee under § 104.33 of these regulations. After an eligible claimant has been notified of the presumed award, the claimant may either accept the presumed compensation determination as the final determination and request payment, or may instead request a review before the Special Master or his designee pursuant to § 104.33. If a claimant opts for a review, the claimant may make supplemental submissions. The Special Master may alter or modify the award if the presumed award was calculated erroneously, or if the claimant demonstrates extraordinary circumstances indicating that the presumed award does not adequately address the claimant's injury. There will be no further review or appeal from this determination.

If the claimant selects Track B, a Claims Evaluator will determine eligibility within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, but shall not determine the claimant's presumed award. The Claims Evaluator will then notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination. Upon notification of eligibility, the claimant will proceed to a hearing pursuant to § 104.33. At such hearing, the Special Master or his designee will utilize the presumed award methodology, but may modify or vary the award if the claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumed award methodology. There shall be no review or appeal from this determination.

Hearings, when sought, will be held by the Special Master or his designee. These hearings shall be conducted in a nonadversarial manner, the objective of which will be to permit the claimant to present information or evidence that the claimant believes is necessary to a full understanding of the claim. Claimants will be permitted, but not required, to present witnesses, including expert witnesses. The hearing officer shall be permitted to examine the credentials of experts.

The hearings shall be limited in length to a time period determined by the Special Master or the relevant hearing officer, but generally not to exceed two hours. The hearings shall, to the extent practicable, be scheduled at times and in locations convenient to the claimant or his or her representative. The claimant shall be entitled to be represented by an attorney in good standing, but it is not necessary that the claimant be represented by an attorney.

G. Assistance to claimants.

In its November 5, 2001 Notice of Inquiry, the Department noted that section 405(a) of the Act establishes some specific requirements with respect to the claim form and the information to be included. The law requires the Special Master to develop a claim form to use in filing claims for compensation under this program. The Special Master is to ensure that the form can be filed electronically if it is determined to be practicable. Moreover, by law, the form must include a statement of the factual basis for eligibility and information regarding income in recent years. In addition, the form is to request information from the claimant as to: (1) the physical harm suffered by a victim, or information confirming the death of the victim, as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001; (2) income tax returns for recent years and other records; and (3) documentation regarding collateral source compensation including life insurance policies and government or employment-related programs which have or may provide funds or benefits to the claimant.

The Department believes that it is important that this Fund be accessible to potential claimants who have limited resources and who are not trained in the law. Rather than attempt to address in detail the means by which the Special Master should provide assistance to claimants, these regulations leave the Special Master with discretion to implement steps to provide assistance to claimants and to make this Fund accessible to them.

Because the Act does not provide for payment of legal or other fees by the Fund, these regulations do not impose any limits on the types or amount of fees that claimants may pay their attorneys or others providing assistance. Although the Department's regulations do not set specific limits on attorneys fees separate from those existing in state law or attorney ethical standards, the Department believes that contingency arrangements exceeding 5% of a claimant's recovery from the Fund would not be in the best interest of the claimants.

The Department contemplates that the Special Master will have discretion to inform potential claimants of the nature of the Fund so that they may make informed decisions regarding the types or amount of fees that they pay for legal or other assistance. For example, the Special Master may notify claimants and potential claimants of the availability of free legal services. Likewise, the Special Master may inform claimants and potential claimants that the Fund is a no-fault, administrative scheme that should not involve the kind of risks and expense that would justify any significant contingency fees.

These regulations similarly do not address the manner in which claimants may use funds that they receive from the Fund, except that the Personal Representatives must agree in an acknowledgment and release form to distribute the award to the beneficiaries of the decedent in accordance with the decedent's will or applicable state law or ruling by a court of competent jurisdiction. While the Department does not believe that it is appropriate for the Special Master to place further legal restrictions on the claimants' or beneficiaries' use of payments from the Fund, the Department does contemplate that the Special Master will have discretion to provide claimants with information regarding annuities or other financial planning devices or to offer structured awards with periodic payments.

Application of various laws and Executive Orders to this rulemaking.

Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. 553

This rule provides for compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured and to the personal representatives of those who were killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. In order to provide compensation to eligible claimants as expeditiously as possible, Congress set a short 90-day deadline for the issuance of these regulations. The Department did seek public input on the issues, but it was not possible for the Department to prepare and publish a proposed rule for notice and comment within that very short time period.

The APA provides that an agency need not go through proposed rulemaking and comment before issuing rules to implement benefits programs. 5 U.S.C. 553(a)(2). Moreover, the Department, in consultation with the Special Master, determined that taking the time to draft and publish a proposed rule for notice and comment before this rule took effect would have been impracticable in light of the short time between the enactment of the statute and the deadline for rulemaking, and also would have been contrary to the public interest, which strongly favors prompt disbursement of benefits. Accordingly, the Department has determined that there is "good cause" for exempting this rule from the provision of the Administrative Procedure Act that requires a notice of proposed rulemaking and the opportunity for public comment. 5 U.S.C. 553(b)(B).

For the same reasons, the Department also finds "good cause" for exempting this rule from the provision of the Administrative Procedure Act providing for a delayed effective date. 5 U.S.C. 553(d). Delaying the opportunity for eligible claimants to seek Advance Benefits or to file claims under the Act would be contrary to the public interest.

Congressional Review Act

The Administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs of the Office of Management and Budget has designated this interim final rule as a "major rule" as that term is defined by the Congressional Review Act ("CRA"), 5 U.S.C. 801 et. seq. Pursuant to section 808(2) of the CRA, the Department finds that "good cause" exists for establishing an effective date for this rule upon publication because delay would be impracticable in light of the short time between the enactment of the statute and the deadline for rulemaking, and also would be contrary to the public interest favoring prompt disbursement of benefits.

Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995

The Department of Justice, Civil Division, has submitted the following information collection request to the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) for review and clearance in accordance with the emergency review procedures of the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995. OMB approval has been granted, and this information collection has been assigned OMB control number 1105-0073. The proposed information collection is published to obtain comments from the public and affected agencies. The emergency approval is only valid for 180 days. Comments should be directed to OMB, Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs, Attention: Department of Justice Desk Officer, Washington, D.C. 20530.

During the first 60 days of this same review period, a regular review of this information collection will be undertaken. All comments and suggestions, or questions regarding additional information, including obtaining a copy of the proposed information collection instrument with instructions, should be directed to Office of the Special Master, U.S. Department of Justice, 950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. 20530. We request written comments and suggestions from the public and affected agencies concerning the proposed emergency collection of information.

Your comments should address one or more of the following four points:

- (1) Evaluate whether the proposed collection of information is necessary for the proper performance of the functions of the agency, including whether the information will have practical utility;
- (2) Evaluate the accuracy of the agency's estimate of the burden of the proposed collection of information, including the validity of the methodology and assumptions used;
- (3) Enhance the quality, utility, and clarity of the information to be collected; and
- (4) Minimize the burden of the collection of information on those who are to respond, including through the use of appropriate automated, electronic, mechanical, or other technological collection techniques or other forms of information technology, e.g., permitting electronic submission of responses.

Privacy Act of 1974

The Department of Justice, Civil Division is establishing a new Privacy Act system of records entitled "September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001, JUSTICE/CIV-008." By law, regulations addressing certain administrative matters for the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 must be issued within the 90-day period established by Congress. The Privacy Act notice will be published with no routine uses, so that it will be effective on the date published. It is likely that amendments to this notice, including routine uses, will be published at a later date, with the opportunity to comment. In the interim, disclosures necessary to process claims will be made only with the written consent of claimants or as otherwise authorized under 5 U.S.C. 552a(b).

Regulatory Flexibility Act

These regulations set forth procedures by which the Federal government will award compensation benefits to eligible victims of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. Under 5 U.S.C. 601(6), the term "small entity" does not include the Federal government, the party charged with incurring the costs attendant to the implementation and administration of the Victims Compensation Fund. To the extent that small entities, including small government entities, will be economically affected by the promulgation of these regulations, such effects will likely be minimal. Further, the number of entities that will be affected will, in all probability, fall short of a "substantial number" of small entities. In fact, the Department believes that the promulgation of these rules will play a considerable role in reducing the amount of complex, private litigation, wherein a substantial number of small (and large) entities would undoubtedly be significantly impacted.

Accordingly, the Department has reviewed this rule in accordance with the Regulatory Flexibility Act (5 U.S.C. 605(b)) and by approving it certifies that this rule will not have a significant economic impact on a substantial number of small entities because it provides compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and compensation through a "personal representative" for those who were killed as a result of those crashes. This rule provides compensation to individuals, not to entities.

Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995

This rule will not result in the expenditure by State, local and tribal governments, in the aggregate, or by the private sector, of $100,000,000 or more in any one year, and it will not significantly or uniquely affect small governments. SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Statement by the Special Master

The September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 is an unprecedented expression of compassion on the part of the American people to the victims and their families devastated by the horror and tragedy of September 11. The Act itself (specifically Title IV – Victim Compensation), and the attached regulations drafted and implemented pursuant to the Act, are designed to bring some measure of financial relief to those most devastated by the events of

Executive Order 13132 - Federalism

This regulation will not have substantial direct effects on the States, on the relationship between the national government and the States, or on distribution of power and responsibilities among the various levels of government. Therefore, in accordance with Executive Order 13132, it is determined that this rule does not have sufficient federalism implications to warrant the preparation of a Federalism Assessment. However, the Department of Justice has worked cooperatively with state and local officials in the affected communities in the preparation of this rule. Also, the Department individually notified national associations representing elected officials of the initial request for comment and will be taking similar action in connection with the interim final rule.

Subpart A - General; Eligibility

§ 104.1 Purpose.

This part implements the provisions of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001, Title IV of Public Law 107-42, 115 Stat. 230 (Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act) to provide compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and to the "personal representatives" of those who were killed as a result of the crashes. All compensation provided through the Fund will be on account of personal physical injuries or death.

§ 104.2 Eligibility definitions and requirements.

(a) Eligible claimants. The term eligible claimants means:

(1) Individuals present at the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site at the time of or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes and who suffered physical harm, as defined herein, as a direct result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes;

(2) The Personal Representatives of deceased individuals aboard American Airlines flights 11 or 77 and United Airlines flights 93 or 175; and

(3) The Personal Representatives of individuals who were present at the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site at the time of or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes and who died as a direct result of the terrorist-related aircraft crash.

(4) The term eligible claimants does not include any individual or representative of an individual who is identified to have been a participant or conspirator in the terrorist-related crashes of September 11.

(b) Immediate aftermath. The term immediate aftermath of the crashes shall mean, for purposes of all claimants other than rescue workers, the period of time from the crashes until 12 hours after the crashes. With respect to rescue workers who assisted in efforts to search for and recover victims, the immediate aftermath shall include the period from the crashes until 96 hours after the crashes.

(c) Physical harm.

(1) The term physical harm shall mean a physical injury to the body that was treated by a medical professional within 24 hours of the injury having been sustained or within 24 hours of rescue; and

(i) Required hospitalization as an in-patient for at least 24 hours; or

(ii) Caused, either temporarily or permanently, partial or total physical disability, incapacity or disfigurement.

(2) In every case not involving death, the physical injury must be verified by contemporaneous medical records created by or at the direction of the medical professional who provided the medical care.

(d) Personal Representative. The term Personal Representative shall mean the person determined to be the Personal Representative under § 104.4 of this part.

(e) Present at the site. The term present at the site (i.e., the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site) shall mean physically present at the time of the crashes or in the immediate aftermath:

(1) In the buildings or portions of buildings that were destroyed as a result of the airplane crashes; or

(2) In any area contiguous to the crash sites that the Special Master determines was sufficiently close to the site that there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm resulting from the impact of the aircraft or any subsequent fire, explosions, or building collapses (generally, the immediate area in which the impact occurred, fire occurred, portions of buildings fell, or debris fell upon and injured persons).

§ 104.3 Other definitions.

(a) Beneficiary. The term beneficiary shall mean a person entitled under the laws of the decedent's domicile to receive payments or benefits from the estate of or on behalf of the decedent on whose behalf the claim to the Fund was filed.

(b) Dependents. The Special Master shall identify as dependents those persons so identified by the victim on his or her federal tax return for the year 2000 unless:

(1) The claimant demonstrates that a minor child of the victim was born or adopted on or after January 1, 2001;

(2) Another person became a dependent in accordance with then-applicable law on or after January 1, 2001; or

(3) The victim was not required by law to file a federal income tax return for the year 2000.

(c) Spouse. The Special Master shall identify as the spouse of a victim the person reported as spouse on the victim's federal tax return for the year 2000 unless:

(1) The victim was married or divorced in accordance with applicable state law on or after January 1, 2001; or

(2) The victim was not required by law to file a federal income tax return for the year 2000.

(d) The Act. The Act, as used in this part, shall mean Public Law 107-42, 115 Stat. 230 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act"), 49 U.S.C. 40101 note.

(e) Victim. The term victim shall mean an eligible injured claimant or a decedent on whose behalf a claim is brought by an eligible Personal Representative.

§ 104.4 Personal Representative.

(a) In general. The Personal Representative shall be:

(1) An individual appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction as the Personal Representative of the decedent or as the executor or administrator of the decedent's will or estate.

(2) In the event that no Personal Representative or executor or administrator has been appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction, and such issue is not the subject of pending litigation or other dispute, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative for purposes of compensation by the Fund is the person named by the decedent in the decedent's will as the executor or administrator of the decedent's estate. In the event no will exists, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative for purposes of compensation by the Fund is the first person in the line of succession established by the laws of the decedent's domicile governing intestacy.

(b) Notice to beneficiaries. Any purported Personal Representative must, before filing an Eligibility Form, provide written notice of the claim (including a designated portion of the Eligibility Form) to the immediate family of the decedent (including, but not limited to, the decedent's spouse, former spouses, children, other dependents, and parents), to the executor, administrator, and beneficiaries of the decedent's will, and to any other persons who may reasonably be expected to assert an interest in an award or to have a cause of action to recover damages relating to the wrongful death of the decedent. Personal delivery or transmission by certified mail, return receipt requested, shall be deemed sufficient notice under this provision. The claim forms shall require that the purported Personal Representative certify that such notice (or other notice that the Special Master deems appropriate) has been given. In addition, as provided in § 104.21(b)(5) of this part, the Special Master may publish a list of individuals who have filed Eligibility Forms and the names of the victims for whom compensation is sought, but shall not publish the content of any such form.

(c) Objections to Personal Representatives. Objections to the authority of an individual to file as the Personal Representative of a decedent may be filed with the Special Master by parties who assert a financial interest in the award up to 30 days following the filing by the Personal Representative. If timely filed, such objections shall be treated as evidence of a "dispute" pursuant to paragraph (d) of this section.

(d) Disputes as to identity. The Special Master shall not be required to arbitrate, litigate, or otherwise resolve any dispute as to the identity of the Personal Representative. In the event of a dispute over the appropriate Personal Representative, the Special Master may suspend adjudication of the claim or, if sufficient information is provided, calculate the appropriate award and authorize payment, but place in escrow any payment until the dispute is resolved either by agreement of the disputing parties or by a court of competent jurisdiction. Alternatively, the disputing parties may agree in writing to the identity of a Personal Representative to act on their behalf, who may seek and accept payment from the Fund while the disputing parties work to settle their dispute.

§ 104.5 Foreign claims.

In the case of claims brought by or on behalf of foreign citizens, the Special Master may alter the requirements for documentation set forth herein to the extent such materials are unavailable to such foreign claimants.

§ 104.6 Amendments to this rule.

In the event that amendments are subsequently made to any section of this Part, claimants are entitled to have their claims processed in accordance with the provisions that were in effect at the time that their claims were submitted under § 104.21(d).

Subpart B - Filing for Compensation; Application for Advance Benefits

§ 104.21 Filing for compensation.

(a) Compensation form; "filing." Except for applications for Advance Benefits pursuant to § 104.22, no claim may be considered until the claimant has submitted both an "Eligibility Form" and either a "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or a "Death Compensation Form." A claim shall be deemed "filed" for purposes of section 405(b)(3) of the Act (providing that the Special Master shall issue a determination not later than 120 days after the date on which a claim is filed), and for any time periods in this part, when a Claims Evaluator determines that both the Eligibility Form and either a Personal Injury Compensation Form or a Death Compensation Form are substantially complete. Provided, however, that if a claimant files an Eligibility Form requesting Advance Benefits pursuant to § 104.22 of this part without filing either a "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or a "Death Compensation Form," the claim shall be deemed "filed" when the Claims Evaluator determines that the Eligibility Form is substantially complete, but the time period for determination and any time periods in this part shall be stayed or tolled as described in § 104.22(g) of this part.

(b) Eligibility Form. The Special Master shall develop an Eligibility Form that will require the claimant to provide information necessary for determining the claimant's eligibility to recover from the Fund.

(1) The Eligibility Form may require that the claimant certify that he or she has dismissed any pending lawsuit seeking damages as a result of the terrorist-related airplane crashes of September 11, 2001 (except for actions seeking collateral source benefits) within 90 days of the effective date of this part pursuant to section 405(c)(3)(B)(ii) of the Act and that there is no pending lawsuit brought by a dependent, spouse, or beneficiary of the victim.

(2) The Special Master may require as part of the notice requirement pursuant to § 104.4(b) that the claimant provide copies of a designated portion of the Eligibility Form to the immediate family of the decedent (including, but not limited to, the spouse, former spouses, children, other dependents, and parents), to the executor, administrator, and beneficiaries of the decedent's will, and to any other persons who may reasonably be expected to assert an interest in an award or to have a cause of action to recover damages relating to the wrongful death of the decedent.

(3) The Eligibility Form may require claimants to provide the following proof:

(i) Proof of death: Death certificate or similar official documentation;

(ii) Proof of presence at site: Documentation sufficient to establish presence at one of the crash sites, which may include, without limitation, a death certificate, records of employment, contemporaneous medical records, contemporaneous records of federal, state, city or local government, an affidavit or declaration of the decedent's or injured claimant's employer, or other sworn statement (or unsworn statement complying with 28 U.S.C. 1746) regarding the presence of the victim;

(iii) Proof of death on board aircraft: Death certificate or records of American or United Airlines or other sufficient official documentation;

(iv) Proof of physical harm: Contemporaneous medical records of hospitals, clinics, physicians, licensed medical personnel, or registries maintained by federal, state, or local government, and records of all continuing medical treatment;

(v) Personal Representative: Copies of relevant legal documentation, including court orders; letters testamentary or similar documentation; proof of the purported Personal Representative's relationship to the decedent; copies of wills, trusts, or other testamentary documents; and information regarding other possible beneficiaries as requested by the Eligibility Form;

(vi) Any other information that the Special Master deems necessary to determine the claimant's eligibility.

(4) The Special Master may also require waivers, consents, or authorizations from claimants to obtain directly from third parties tax returns, medical information, employment information, or other information that the Special Master deems relevant in determining the claimant's eligibility or award, and may request an opportunity to review originals of documents submitted in connection with the Fund.

(5) Application for Advance Benefits: The Eligibility Form shall include a section allowing claimants to indicate that they wish to apply for Advance Benefits. Claimants who apply for such Advance Benefits must certify on that Form that they have not yet received $450,000 in collateral source compensation if they are bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim with a spouse or dependent, $250,000 in collateral source compensation if they are bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim who was single with no dependents, or an amount in excess of their lost wages plus out-of-pocket medical expenses if they are an injured claimant. All such claimants also must state on the Form facts establishing financial hardship that would justify a determination that they are in need of Advance Benefits.

(6) The Special Master may publish a list of individuals who have filed Eligibility Forms and the names of the victims for whom compensation is sought, but shall not publish the content of any such form.

(c) Personal Injury Compensation Form and Death Compensation Form. The Special Master shall develop a Personal Injury Compensation Form that each injured claimant must submit. The Special Master shall also develop a Death Compensation Form that each Personal Representative must submit. These forms shall require the claimant to provide certain information that the Special Master deems necessary to determining the amount of any award, including information concerning income, collateral sources, benefits, and other financial information, and shall require the claimant to state the factual basis for the amount of compensation sought. It shall also allow the claimant to submit certain other information that may be relevant, but not necessary, to the determination of the amount of any award.

(1) Claimants shall, at a minimum, submit all tax returns that were filed for the years 1998, 1999, and 2000. The Special Master may, at his discretion, require that claimants submit copies of tax returns or other records for any other period of years he deems appropriate for determination of an award. The Special Master may also require waivers, consents, or authorizations from claimants to obtain directly from third parties medical information, employment information, or other information that the Special Master deems relevant to determining the amount of any award.

(2) Claimants may attach to the "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" any additional statements, documents or analyses by physicians, experts, September 11. In one important sense, the Fund symbolizes the commitment of the American people to those most in need. It is an example of how Americans rally around the less fortunate.

The attached regulations have two objectives: (1) to provide fair, predictable and consistent compensation to the victims of September 11 and their families throughout the life of the program; and (2) to do so in an expedited, efficient manner without unnecessary bureaucracy and needless demands on the victims. The regulations highlight a fast track administrative compensation program, eliminating the red tape, time and expense of a traditional lawsuit. Quick payment to eligible claimants characterizes this program.

The Fund offers the eligible claimant an alternative to litigation. To succeed in the courtroom, a victim of the September 11 tragedy, or his or her representative, would be compelled to litigate, probably for many years at excessive cost, and with all the uncertainty of result which is part of the litigation process. Among the hazards of such a court proceeding are: Would liability be demonstrated? Against whom? Would sufficient funds be available to pay in full any resulting tort award? Would the verdict, even if favorable, withstand appellate challenge?

Trade-offs are required in developing Fund procedures that are different than those in the more conventional lawsuit. It is possible to develop an alternative administrative scheme, providing speedy and efficient compensation, which will help bring some closure to the events of September 11. We should not require its victims to revisit the tragic events of September 11 over and over again during the pendency of a lawsuit in our courts.

In formulating the regulations, we heeded the instruction of the Attorney General to help the neediest of victims as quickly as possible. Accordingly, under these regulations, an eligible claimant can receive an immediate advance payment of $50,000 in cases involving death, or $25,000 in certain cases involving serious physical injury. These payments are downpayments only, advanced to provide immediate financial assistance to those in need.

advisors, or any other person or entity that the claimant believes may be relevant to a determination of compensation.

(d) Submission of a claim. Section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act provides that upon the submission of a claim under the Fund, the claimant waives the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any Federal or State court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for civil actions to recover collateral source obligations. A claim shall be deemed submitted for purposes of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act when the claim is deemed filed pursuant to § 104.21, regardless of whether any time limits are stayed or tolled.

(e) Provisions of information by third parties. Any third party having an interest in a claim brought by a Personal Representative may provide written statements or information regarding the Personal Representative's claim. The Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee may, at his or her discretion, include the written statements or information as part of the claim.

§ 104.22 Advance Benefits.

(a) Advance Benefits. Eligible Claimants may apply for immediate "Advance Benefits" in a fixed amount as follows:

- (1) $50,000 for Personal Representatives; and
- (2) $25,000 for injured claimants who meet the requirements of paragraph (d) of this section.

(b) Credit against award. The Advance Benefit shall be credited against any final compensation award so that the amount of the Advance Benefit is deducted from the final award under this program.

(c) Application for Advance Benefits. An otherwise eligible claimant may seek Advance Benefits to alleviate financial hardship faced by the claimant (or financial hardship faced by the beneficiaries of the decedent) by submitting an Eligibility Form described in § 104.21(b) and indicating thereon that he or she is applying for Advance Benefits.

(d) Eligibility for Advance Benefits. In the case of a Personal Representative, the claimant may be deemed eligible for Advance Benefits if a Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee determines that the claimant is eligible to recover under the Fund. In the case of an injured claimant, the claimant may be deemed eligible for Advance Benefits when the Special Master or his designee determines that the claimant is eligible to recover under the Fund and that the claimant's physical injury required hospitalization for one week or more.

(e) Authorization of payments.

(1) Payment in the amount described in paragraph (a) of this section will be authorized immediately upon a determination that the claimant is eligible for Advance Benefits and the claimant is:

(i) An injured claimant;

(ii) A Personal Representative who was the spouse of the deceased victim on September 11, 2001; or

(iii) A Personal Representative who has obtained the consent of the spouse of the deceased victim (or, if there is no surviving spouse, all of the dependents of the deceased victim) to file for Advance Benefits.

(2) (i) With respect to other Personal Representatives, payment will be authorized within 15 days after the determination that the claimant is eligible for Advance Benefits, provided that no other individual has asserted a colorable conflicting claim as the Personal Representative with respect to the decedent and the Personal Representative identifies and has given notice to the beneficiaries to whom such Advance Benefits will be distributed.

(ii) In the event that a colorable conflicting claim has been asserted, no Advance Benefit will be paid until a final eligibility determination has been made.

(f) Waiver of the right to sue. As set forth in § 104.21(d) of this part, a claim shall be deemed submitted for purposes of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act when a claimant has filed an Eligibility Form and is determined by a Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee to be an eligible claimant. The claimant will therefore have waived the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any Federal or State Court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for civil actions to recover collateral source obligations.

(g) Tolling of 120-day clock and other time periods. A claimant filing an Eligibility Form requesting Advance Benefits before filing a Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form will be deemed to have waived his right to commencement of the 120-day period in section 405(b)(3) of the Act (providing that the Special Master shall provide notice to the claimant of his determination within 120 days after the date on which a claim is filed). The 120-day period and all other time limitations in this part, except those applicable to Advance Benefit payments, shall be stayed or tolled until such time that a Claims Evaluator determines that the claimant's Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form is substantially complete.

Subpart C - Claim Intake, Assistance, and Review Procedures

§ 104.31 Procedure for claims evaluation.

(a) Initial review. Claims Evaluators shall review the forms filed by the claimant and either deem the claim "filed" (pursuant to 104.21(a)) or notify the claimant of any deficiency in the forms or any required documents.

(b) Procedural tracks. Each claim will be placed on a procedural track, described herein as "Track A" and "Track B," selected by the claimant on the Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form.

(1) Procedure for Track A. The Claims Evaluator shall determine eligibility and the claimant's presumed award pursuant to §§ 104.43 to 104.46 of this part and, within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination, the amount of the presumed award, and the right to request a hearing before the Special Master or his designee under § 104.33 of this part. After an eligible claimant has been notified of the presumed award, the claimant may either accept the presumed compensation determination as the final determination and request payment, or may instead request a review before the Special Master or his designee pursuant to § 104.33. Claimants found to be ineligible may appeal pursuant to § 104.32.

(2) Procedure for Track B. The Claims Evaluator shall determine eligibility within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, but shall not determine the claimant's presumed award; the Claims Evaluator shall notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination. Upon notification of eligibility, the claimant will proceed to a hearing pursuant to § 104.33. At such hearing, the Special Master or his designee shall utilize the presumptive award methodology as set forth in §§ 104.43 to 104.46 of this part, but may modify or vary the award if the claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award methodology. There shall be no review or appeal from this determination.

(c) Multiple claims from the same family. The Special Master may treat claims brought by or on behalf of two or more members of the same immediate family as related or consolidated claims for purposes of determining the amount of any award.

§ 104.32 Eligibility review.

Any claimant deemed ineligible by the Claims Evaluator may appeal that decision to the Special Master or his designee by filing an eligibility appeal on forms created by the office of the Special Master.

§ 104.33 Hearing.

(a) Supplemental submissions. The claimant may prepare and file Supplemental Submissions within 21 calendar days from notification of either the presumed award (Track A) or eligibility (Track B). The Special Master shall develop forms appropriate for Supplemental Submissions.

(b) Conduct of hearings. Hearings shall be before the Special Master or his designee. The objective of hearings shall be to permit the claimant to present information or evidence that the claimant believes is necessary to a full understanding of the claim. The claimant may request that the Special Master or his designee review any evidence relevant to the determination of the award, including without limitation: factors and variables used in calculating economic loss; the identity of the victim's spouse and dependents; the financial needs of the claimant; facts affecting noneconomic loss; and any factual or legal arguments that the claimant contends should affect the award. Claimants shall be entitled to submit any statements or reports in writing. The Special Master or his designee may require authentication of documents, including medical records and reports, and may request and consider information regarding the financial resources and expenses of the victim's family or other material that the Special Master or his designee deems relevant.

(c) Location and duration of hearings. The hearings shall, to the extent practicable, be scheduled at times and in locations convenient to the claimant or his or her representative. The hearings shall be limited in length to a time period determined by the Special Master or his designee, but generally not to exceed two hours. The claimant may elect whether the hearing shall be public or private.

(d) Witnesses, counsel, and experts. Claimants shall be permitted, but not required, to present witnesses, including expert witnesses. The Special Master or his designee shall be permitted to question witnesses and examine the credentials of experts. The claimant shall be entitled to be represented by an attorney in good standing, but it is not necessary that the claimant be represented by an attorney.

(e) Waivers. The Special Master shall have authority and discretion to require any waivers necessary to obtain more individualized information on specific claimants.

(f) Track A review of presumed award. For proceedings under Track A, the Special Master or his designee shall make a determination whether:

(1) There was an error in determining the presumptive award, either because the claimant's individual criteria were misapplied or for another reason; or

(2) The claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award.

(g) Determination. The Special Master shall notify the claimant in writing of the final amount of the award, but need not create or provide any written record of the deliberations that resulted in that determination. There shall be no further review or appeal of the Special Master's determination.

§ 104.34 Publication of awards.

In order to assist potential claimants in evaluating their options of either filing a claim with the Special Master or filing a lawsuit in tort, the Special Master reserves the right to publicize the amounts of some or all of the awards, but shall not publish the name of the claimants or victims that received each award. If published, these decisions would be intended by the Special Master as general guides for potential claimants and should not be viewed as precedent binding on the Special Master or his staff.

§ 104.35 Claims deemed abandoned by claimants.

The Special Master and his staff will endeavor to evaluate promptly any information submitted by claimants. Nonetheless, it is the responsibility of the claimant to keep the Special Master informed of his or her current address and to respond within the duration of this two-year program to requests for additional information. Claims outstanding at the end of this program because of a claimant's failure to complete his or her filings shall be deemed abandoned.

Subpart D - Amount of Compensation for Eligible Claimants.

§ 104.41. Amount of compensation.

As provided in section 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) of the Act, in determining the amount of compensation to which a claimant is entitled, the Special Master shall take into consideration the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant. The individual circumstances of the claimant may include the financial needs or financial resources of the claimant or the victim's dependents and beneficiaries. As provided in section 405(b)(6) of the Act, the Special Master shall reduce the amount of compensation by the amount of collateral source compensation the claimant (or, in the case of a Personal Representative, the victim's beneficiaries) has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. In no event shall an award (before collateral source compensation has been deducted) be less than $500,000 in any case brought on behalf of a deceased victim with a spouse or dependent, or $300,000 in any case brought on behalf of a deceased victim who was single with no dependents.

§ 104.42. Applicable state law.

The phrase "to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable state law," as used in the statute's definition of economic loss in section 402(5) of the Act, is interpreted to mean that the Special Master is not permitted to compensate claimants for those categories or types of economic losses that would not be compensable under the law of the state that would be applicable to any tort claims brought by or on behalf of the victim.

§ 104.43 Determination of presumed economic loss for decedents.

In reaching presumed determinations for economic loss for Personal Representatives bringing claims on behalf of decedents, the Special Master shall consider sums corresponding to the following:

- (a) Loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment. The Special Master, as part of the process of reaching a "determination" pursuant to section 405(b) of the Act, shall develop a methodology and publish schedules, tables, or charts that will permit prospective claimants to estimate determinations of loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment based upon individual circumstances of the deceased victim, including: the age of the decedent as of September 11, 2001; the number of dependents who survive the decedent; whether the decedent is survived by a spouse; and the amount and nature of the decedent's income for recent years. The decedent's salary/income in 1998-2000 shall be evaluated in a manner that the Special Master deems appropriate. The Special Master may, if he deems appropriate, take an average of income figures for each of those three years. The Special Master's methodology and schedules, tables, or charts shall yield presumed determinations of loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment for annual incomes up to but not beyond the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States for the year 2000. In cases where the victim was a minor child, the Special Master may assume an average income for the child commensurate with the average income of all wage earners in the United States.

(b) Medical expense loss. This loss equals the out-of-pocket medical expenses that were incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that were not paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). This loss shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the Personal Representative.

(c) Replacement services loss. For decedents who did not have any prior earned income, or who worked only part time outside the home, economic loss may be determined with reference to replacement services and similar measures.

(d) Loss due to death/burial costs. This loss shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the personal representative and includes the out-of-pocket burial costs that were incurred.

(e) Loss of business or employment opportunities. Such losses shall be addressed through the procedure outlined above in paragraph (a) of this section.

§ 104.44 Determination of presumed noneconomic losses for decedents.

The presumed noneconomic losses for decedents shall be $250,000 plus an additional $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent of the deceased victim. Such presumed losses include a noneconomic component of replacement services loss.

§ 104.45 Determination of presumed economic loss for claimants who suffered physical harm.

In reaching presumed determinations for economic loss for claimants who suffered physical harm (but did not die), the Special Master shall consider sums corresponding to the following:

(a) Loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment. The Special Master may determine the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the claimant, regarding the actual amount of work that the claimant has missed or will miss without compensation. Alternatively, the Special Master may determine the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment by relying upon the methodology created pursuant to § 104.43(a) and adjusting the loss based upon the extent of the victim's physical harm.

(1) Disability; in general. In evaluating claims of disability, the Special Master will, in general, make a determination regarding whether the claimant is capable of performing his or her usual profession in light of the injuries.

(2) Total permanent disability. With respect to claims of total permanent disability, the Special Master may accept a determination of disability made by the Social Security Administration as evidence of disability without any further medical evidence or review. The Special Master may also consider determinations of permanent total disability made by other governmental agencies or private insurers in evaluating the claim. The Special Master may require that the claimant submit an evaluation of the claimant's disability and ability to perform his or her occupation prepared by medical experts.

(3) Partial disability. With respect to claims of partial disability, the Special Master may consider evidence of the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to perform his or her usual occupation as well as the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to participate in usual daily activities.

(b) Medical Expense Loss. This loss equals the out-of-pocket medical expenses that were incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that were not paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). In addition, this loss equals future out-of-pocket medical expenses that will be incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that will not be paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). These losses shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the claimant.

(c) Replacement services loss. For injured claimants who did not have any prior earned income, or who worked only part-time outside the home, economic loss may be determined with reference to replacement services and similar measures.

(d) Loss of business or employment opportunities. Such losses shall be addressed through the procedure outlined above in paragraph (a) of this section.

§ 104.46 Determination of presumed noneconomic losses for claimants who suffered physical harm.

The Special Master may determine the presumed noneconomic losses for claimants who suffered physical harm (but did not die) by relying upon the noneconomic losses described in § 104.44 and adjusting the losses based upon the extent of the victim's physical harm. Such presumed losses include any noneconomic component of replacement services loss.

We were required, of course, to adhere to the language which Congress set out in the statute, including the provisions requiring that awards be offset by all collateral source compensation such as benefits from life insurance and other government programs. However, we did find ambiguity in the statute as to gifts provided to victims and their families by private charities. These regulations do not require that awards be offset by such private charitable assistance.

We have concluded that the purpose of the Act is not simply to examine economic and noneconomic harm, but also to provide compensation that is just and appropriate in light of claimants' individual circumstances. We have concluded that any methodology that does nothing more than attempt to replicate a theoretically possible future income stream would lead to awards that would be insufficient relative to the needs of some victims' families, and excessive relative to the needs of others. The statute specifies that individual circumstances beyond economic and noneconomic harm should be taken into account. It is our view that, absent extraordinary circumstances, awards in excess of $3 million, tax-free, will rarely be appropriate in light of individual needs and resources. At the same time, we want to ensure that victims' families are receiving at least a minimum level of resources to help meet their needs and rebuild their lives. Thus, we have concluded that the families of deceased victims should receive a combined total of at least $500,000 from this program, other state and federal programs, life insurance policies and other sources of compensation. Similarly, the baseline for single decedents should be $300,000. This ensures that every needy claimant's total compensation from this program and other sources will be at least equal to these threshold amounts.

In sum, the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 is an attempt by the American people to demonstrate their solidarity with, and generosity for, those injured by the terrible September 11 attack on our country. It provides an alternative compensation scheme to the traditional tort system, a method of providing substantial and quick compensation to those who elect to participate.

(a) Payments that constitute collateral source compensation. The amount of compensation shall be reduced by all collateral source compensation, including life insurance, pension funds, death benefit programs, and payments by federal, state, or local governments related to the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001.

(b) Payments that do not constitute collateral source compensation. The following payments received by claimants do not constitute collateral source compensation:

(1) The value of services or in-kind charitable gifts such as provision of emergency housing, food, or clothing; and

(2) Charitable donations distributed to the beneficiaries of the decedent, to the injured claimant, or to the beneficiaries of the injured claimant by private charitable entities; provided, however, that the Special Master may determine that funds provided to victims or their families through a private charitable entity constitute, in substance, a payment described in paragraph (a) of this section.

Subpart E - Payment of Claims

§ 104.51 Payments to eligible individuals.

Not later than 20 days after the date on which a determination is made by the Special Master regarding the amount of compensation due a claimant under the Fund, the Special Master shall authorize payment to such claimant of the amount determined with respect to the claimant.

§ 104.52 Distribution of award to decedent's beneficiaries.

The Personal Representative shall distribute the award in a manner consistent with the law of the decedent's domicile or any applicable rulings made by a court of competent jurisdiction. The Personal Representative shall, before payment is authorized, provide to the Special Master a plan for distribution of any award received from the Fund. Notwithstanding any other provision of these regulations or any other provision of state law, in the event that the Special Master concludes that the Personal Representative's plan for distribution does not appropriately compensate the victim's spouse, children, or other relatives, the Special Master may direct the Personal Representative to distribute all or part of the award to such spouse, children, or other relatives.

Subpart F - Limitations

§ 104.61 Limitation on civil actions.

(a) General. Section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act provides that upon the submission of a claim under the Fund, the claimant waives the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any federal or state court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except that this limitation does not apply to civil actions to recover collateral source obligations. The Special Master shall take appropriate steps to inform potential claimants of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act.

(b) Pending actions. Claimants who have filed a civil action or who are a party to such an action as described in paragraph (a) of this section may not file a claim with the Special Master unless they withdraw from such action not later than [PLEASE INSERT DATE WHICH IS 90 DAYS AFTER THE DATE OF PUBLICATION IN THE FEDERAL REGISTER].

§ 104.62 Time limit on filing claims.

§ 104.63 Subrogation.

Compensation under this Fund does not constitute the recovery of tort damages against a third party nor the settlement of a third party action, and the United States shall be subrogated to all potential claims against third party tortfeasors of any victim receiving compensation from the Fund. For that reason, no person or entity having paid other benefits or compensation to or on behalf of a victim shall have any right of recovery, whether through subrogation or otherwise, against the compensation paid by the Fund.

Subpart G - Measures to Protect the Integrity of the Compensation Program

§ 104.71 Procedures to prevent and detect fraud.

(a) Review of claims. For the purpose of detecting and preventing the payment of fraudulent claims and for the purpose of assuring accurate and appropriate payments to eligible claimants, the Special Master shall implement procedures to:

- (1) Verify, authenticate, and audit claims;
- (2) Analyze claim submissions to detect inconsistencies, irregularities, duplication, and multiple claimants; and
- (3) Ensure the quality control of claims review procedures.

(b) Quality control. The Special Master shall institute periodic quality control audits designed to evaluate the accuracy of submissions and the accuracy of payments, subject to the oversight of the Inspector General of the Department of Justice.

(c) False or fraudulent claims. The Special Master shall refer all evidence of false or fraudulent claims to appropriate law enforcement authorities.

APPENDIX TO PREAMBLE
SUMMARY OF PUBLIC COMMENTS SUBMITTED IN RESPONSE TO THE
NOVEMBER 5, 2001 NOTICE OF INQUIRY AND ADVANCE NOTICE OF RULEMAKING.

The following is a summary of the comments the Department of Justice ("the Department") received in response to its Notice of Inquiry published on November 5, 2001. The Notice of Inquiry sought input on numerous issues regarding potential regulations for the "September 11 Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund"), which was signed into law as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act")(the "Act").

Over 800 comments were received by the November 26, 2001 deadline established by the Department. Additionally, hundreds of comments have been received since that date. Every comment was – and continues to be – reviewed, considered, and catalogued into one or more of 72 different topics. While the following summary does not address every issue raised by commenters, it provides a general synopsis of the most often raised issues. The summary is not intended to be an exhaustive illustration of every issue contemplated by the Special Master or the Department. Indeed, as mentioned above, all comments were considered in the promulgation of these interim final rules. Finally, the summarized issues below are not arranged in any particular order of importance or level of volume.

The Effective Date of This Interim Final Rule

While the Act specified that this rule should be issued by December 21, 2001, it did not specify when they should become effective. Accordingly, the Department sought comment on this issue. The Department noted that the Administrative Procedure Act generally provides that rules not go into effect for at least 30 days absent "good cause."

Many commenters favored an immediate effective date so that claims could be filed right away. Many indicated an immediate need for relief and expressed frustration about their experiences with obtaining short-term assistance from other sources. However, some commenters thought an immediate effective date would be difficult to implement because the Special Master would need time to hire personnel and to set up the operation of the program before beginning to process claims.

A number of commenters suggested a compromise – making available some amount of short-term relief on an immediate basis to eligible claimants, and then commencing the more detailed review process necessary to provide a final award. Some suggested using flat amounts for these immediate awards, while another commenter suggested establishing an interest-free line of credit upon which families could draw. Another suggestion was that claims for immediate assistance be prioritized by "need."

Eligibility

In its November 5, 2001, Notice of Inquiry, the Department noted that section 405(b) of the statute requires the Special Master to determine whether a claimant is an "eligible individual" under section 405(c). "Eligibility," in turn, is defined by the Act to include: (1) individuals (other than the terrorists) aboard American Airlines flights 11 and 77 and United Airlines flights 93 and 175; or (2) individuals who were "present at" the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, or the site of the aircraft crash at Shanksville, Pennsylvania at the time or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes; or (3) personal representatives of deceased individuals who would otherwise be eligible. Moreover, to be eligible for an award, an individual must have suffered physical harm or death as a result of one of the terrorist-related air crashes. The Department sought comment on whether a Departmental regulation or a statement of policy by the Special Master would be appropriate to clarify these criteria, and if so, what those criteria should be.

The Department specifically invited comment on the following questions related to eligibility:

- How should "present at" be interpreted?
- Should the term "physical harm" be limited to serious injuries, as it is under some other no-fault compensation schemes, (see, e.g., N.Y. Ins. Law § 5102), or should it be construed more broadly?
- Should "physical harm" be limited to currently identifiable injuries?
- Can and should the program address latent, but not yet evident, harm?
- What duration of time is intended by the statutory phrase "immediate aftermath"?

(1) "Present At" And "Immediate Aftermath"

Many of the comments addressed the question of how to define the terms "present at the site" and "immediate aftermath," especially for purposes of those who were in New York at the time of the crashes. Some commenters urged a broad definition of these terms. They recommended that anybody in New York City be considered "present" because the debris and ash from the collapse of the World Trade Towers was widespread. Residents who live near the Ground Zero site in New York urged that they be eligible to recover under the Fund.

In contrast, other commenters argued for a narrower definition of the terms, asserting that the legislation intended to constrain the Fund to the locus of the buildings themselves, and to some very limited time period after the crashes. One comment recommended that "immediate aftermath" be defined as 48 hours after the crashes.

(2) Physical Harm

With respect to the nature of harm involved, some commenters asserted there should be no lower boundary for "nonserious" injuries. Of those who commented on the point, there were disagreements as to whether post-traumatic stress could be considered physical harm for purposes of filing a claim under the Fund. Certain commenters indicated that many people suffered substantial stress from witnessing the attacks and devastation and that they should be eligible to recover from the Fund. However, others argued that the Fund was not intended to cover psychological injury because the language of the statute specifically requires that the claimant suffer "physical harm." These commenters feared that recovery for stress-related injuries would open a Pandora's Box of less serious claims, which, in turn, may reduce the amount of compensation issued to those with the most serious physical injuries.

(3) Latent Harm

Some of the comments focused on the problem of latent injuries and diseases. Several commenters mentioned the coughing they have experienced as a result of exposure to the crash site in New York, and some nearby residents expressed concern about latent harm that might accrue from returning to their homes before the conclusion of the rescue and cleanup efforts. On the other hand, other commenters expressed concern about covering any harms that do not manifest themselves within the two-year lifetime of the Fund. They argued the Fund was not designed to compensate for latent harm primarily because the Fund only exists for two years, and many injuries may not become manifest until after that time.

(4) Eligibility of Victims And Survivors

Some commenters addressed the meaning of the word "victim." For example, some commenters urged that any unborn child who died should be considered eligible for an award as a victim. With respect to a different group of potential claimants, some commenters argued that illegal aliens should not be eligible for awards. However, other commenters did not think that legal status should preclude an award from the Fund.

With regard to claims on behalf of decedent victims, the comments evidenced a tremendous amount of confusion about whether the statute intended to cover only the losses incurred by the victim or the losses incurred by relatives and others. Some commenters noted that section 405 of the Act provides that only claims on behalf of the victim can be filed with the Fund, presumably leaving to the courts any claims by family members or partners on their own behalf. However, some commenters noted that section 403 of the Act states that its purpose is to provide compensation to any individual "or relatives of a deceased individual" who were killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes. The commenters further noted that various types of losses that may be compensated by the Fund pursuant to section 402 are akin to those that in civil actions are normally considered losses to survivors rather than to the victim.

Many commenters commented on the "eligibility" of particular "survivors" of the victim. Some suggested that only a spouse and children be considered "eligible." Others expressed concern as to whether parents, divorced spouses, children of a prior marriage, and others with a legal relationship would be "eligible" for an award under the Fund. In this regard, a number of comments specifically urged that non-married partners and others with a non-traditional relationship be considered "eligible" for an award. Some commenters opposed the idea of extending eligibility under the Fund to those in non-traditional relationships and argued for a narrower definition of eligibility.

Similarly, there were a number of comments about how "eligible" survivors would participate in the decision of whether to submit an application to the Fund, since in their view the application to the Fund would prohibit all of them from filing civil litigation. Some commenters explicitly suggested the law be interpreted to allow claims both on behalf of the decedent's estate and on behalf of any survivors, and suggested that such claims could be consolidated for decision before the Special Master. Others, however, specifically recommended that claims be limited to those on behalf of the estate. Many commenters, presuming that to be the case, recommended that the state courts be responsible for designating the representative to represent the estate, and that any award be distributed in accordance with the requirements of the will or state intestacy law.

Assistance To Claimants

In its Notice of Inquiry of November 5, 2001, the Department noted that it would appear that these requirements -- combined with the statutory time frame for the Special Master to reach a decision once a claim is filed -- contemplate a detailed form and filing. Accordingly, the Department invited comments on whether there are actions the Special Master should be required to take before he can accept a claim, or deem a claim "filed." The Department noted that the statute appeared to provide a very limited time frame for the Special Master to evaluate a claim before making a decision -- 120 days from the date a claim is filed. Accordingly, the Department sought comment on whether the Special Master should be permitted to dismiss a claim as not properly filed for lack of adequate supporting information and, if so, whether an individual should thereafter be permitted to refile the claim. Comments were also solicited on whether it would be advisable to include in the rules a procedure where the time for making a determination could be extended by agreement.

The Department also requested comment on the design and content of the claim forms in light of the statutory requirements, as well as on making the forms and their instructions readable and readily available. The Department also sought comment on how it should implement the statutory requirement that claimants be provided with assistance.

While most of those who commented supported maintaining firm deadlines, many commenters suggested that a claimant be able to "halt the clock" at the claimant's discretion for various purposes (e.g., to provide further evidence before the claim is evaluated, to allow more time to prepare for a hearing, or to allow for an administrative review of an initial award determination). Some suggested that the Special Master also have the authority not to start the clock until the claim contained sufficient information upon which an award determination could be made, or to halt the process for a set period of time to allow for review of an initial determination (provided that the claimant concurred with that decision).

A number of commenters stressed that a claimant should not lose the right to proceed with their claim due to an incomplete file. One commenter suggested the Special Master should have 14 days to review a claim before deciding if there is enough information to proceed. Several commenters suggested that claimants not be required to waive their right to litigation until it was determined the claimant was eligible to recover from the Fund. Similarly, some commenters stated they would have difficulty deciding whether or not to opt into the fund (and thus waive their right to sue) if they did not have some idea or presumption of the range of recovery they might expect from the Fund.

Many commenters urged the Department to establish a simplified procedure for initiating a claim with the Fund. They expressed frustration with the barrage of paperwork required to apply for assistance with other organizations. Some employers offered to provide information on behalf of their employees or survivors in an effort to reduce the paperwork burden on claimants. On the other hand, some noted that -- in light of the pro bono legal assistance that has been offered to the survivors -- claimants would have the option to have the assistance of an attorney to complete the forms. A number of commenters suggested a two-step claims process that would involve a simple initial submission, followed by a more asserted effort to collect additional information with the guidance of claimant assistance personnel from the Office of the Special Master.

A number of commenters had suggestions as to how the Special Master might assist claimants both in filing claims and completing the claims process. Many suggested that local offices be established in New York City, Washington D.C., Pennsylvania, and other cities that served as the domicile of victims. Some urged that outreach efforts be made to locate potential claimants and make them aware of the program's operations. Some mentioned that outreach should include multi-lingual assistance and publications. One group suggested that each Hearing Office have an Applicant's Assistant. Others suggested the Special Master hire victim advocates to assist claimants throughout the process.

The Claims Evaluation Process

The Department solicited comment on whether every claimant should be granted an oral hearing or whether paper hearings may be sufficient, and what types of oral hearing might be practicable in light of the statutory time frames.

Further, the Department sought comment on how evidence might be established and whether it is authorized to enforce requests made by the hearing officer to third parties for evidence that is necessary to a proceeding (e.g., evidence that might bear on whether all aspects of the claim file on which the decision will be based are accurate and complete). The Department sought comment on whether such proceedings should be recorded, whether such proceedings should be held in a location convenient to the claimant, how to deal with scheduling conflicts, and whether the opportunity for a hearing can be waived by a claimant through inaction or unwarranted delay.

Many commenters had opposing views on the role hearings should play in claims evaluation. Some commenters -- comparing this program to civil litigation -- viewed the hearings as essential to each and every claim. These commenters recommended hearings as a sort of "mini-trial," which would include rules of evidence (albeit relaxed rules) and adversarial questioning of witnesses. Using the same analogy, however, these commenters suggested that many claims could be "settled" based on only the paper submissions. Other comments suggested the hearings be more akin to an opportunity -- for those claimants who want to exercise it -- to make an informal oral presentation of their cases. They viewed the hearing as an opportunity to ensure that the decision maker was aware of their individual circumstances. Many of these commenters also suggested, for various reasons, that not all claimants would want a hearing. Some commenters suggested allowing claimants, upon filing a claim, to elect among different "tracks" -- one that would involve a hearing, and one that would not.

On the question of who should be hired as hearing officers, suggestions included retired trust executives, retired judges, attorneys experienced in handling high volume caseloads, and those experienced in civil litigation. Some commenters recommended there be a panel of hearing officers rather than one hearing officer. A number of commenters also recommended that claimants have the opportunity for review of their award to ensure that the decision maker was aware of their individual circumstances.

Many commenters submitted detailed procedural suggestions for the claims process. Among other things, these suggestions dealt with how eligibility and damages could be established through the use of affidavits under penalty of perjury in the event relevant documents had been lost as a result of the crashes themselves (e.g., designations of beneficiaries maintained by employers). Additionally, a number of commenters suggested the Special Master have the right to subpoena evidence required to make a determination.

(1) Meeting the 120-day Deadline

The Department invited comment on what means and mechanisms could be implemented to allow just compensation within the statutorily-mandated 120-day period for processing claims. In particular, the Department sought input on whether and how statistical methodologies should be developed and used as a starting point for decision, and whether publication of hypothetical or presumptive awards for classes of individuals would assist potential claimants in determining whether to opt into the Fund. For the most part, these comments were encapsulated in discussions regarding the calculation of damages; namely, economic and noneconomic losses.

(2) Calculating "Economic Losses"

The Department sought specific comment on how the Special Master should determine "economic losses." Although retaining experts is certainly not prohibited, the Special Master will not require any claimant to obtain legal counsel or other experts to assist in proving or presenting evidence of damages. The Special Master may, however, draw on available information from appropriate specialists in relevant fields to analyze economic losses. The Department invited comment regarding the necessary qualifications for such specialists, the data that should be utilized, the methodologies that should be employed, the documentation that should be required for every claimant, and how state law should bear upon such determinations. In addition, the Department invited comments on how to address the economic losses of individuals whose lost future income streams would have been highly contingent, variable, or unpredictable.

As expected, the range of comments on how best to calculate economic losses was widely varied. One group suggested a minimum value be calculated based on median income and remaining years of work, with flexibility to adjust the award after hearing all the evidence in individual cases. Similarly, certain comments suggested the use of a grid would be appropriate in certain circumstances to identify presumed awards. Others urged that no type of grid be used.

In terms of presumptive valuation, a few commenters recommended that awards mirror the amount a party could anticipate receiving from personal injury or wrongful death actions. Others disagreed. Many recognized the limited opportunities now available to potential plaintiffs filing claims in civil courts arising out of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. At least one commenter argued that the fairest approach in determining economic losses is that which insurance companies use in settling claims.

Some commenters indicated that economic awards should not be based on differences in individual income prior to the crash. Some suggested using a flat dollar figure per surviving family member (e.g., $250,000 for each survivor). Another suggested a flat amount for death at $100,000, injury at $50,000, and various other losses at slated dollar figures. On the other hand, some commenters felt the purpose of the program is to act as a substitute for civil damage actions, and that efforts should be made to determine and take into consideration the amount of income likely lost by a decedent. A large number of comments were received with respect to how to establish such income (e.g., average over a certain number of prior years, plus information supplied by employers on future prospects).

(3) Calculating "Noneconomic Losses"

The Department also sought comment as to "noneconomic losses." Most notably, the Department invited comments regarding whether, and in what manner, the Special Master can or should draw meaningful distinctions between both those victims who died in different locations and those who suffered similar injuries. The Department also invited comments on whether the Department should (as some have suggested) issue regulations determining the amount of noneconomic loss for classes of similarly situated individuals or whether, instead, the Special Master should determine all noneconomic loss on a detailed claim-by-claim basis. Further, the Department requested comment on what facts and circumstances should be considered in determining noneconomic losses for each individual, and what standards should be employed.

Comments regarding noneconomic losses were similarly varied. One commenting association suggested noneconomic losses -- such as pain and suffering -- should be standardized because such losses do not vary by income strata. Numerous commenters advocated a "fixed" noneconomic award, stating that the government should not attempt to draw distinctions in the amount of pain suffered by victims or their survivors. One commenter suggested the most equitable process for determining noneconomic awards would be an elective process. Under this proposed method, a claimant could elect to have the award calculated by use of a matrix, or alternatively, could present evidence at a hearing to establish the amount to which the claimant

Neither this Fund nor any monetary compensation can possibly provide a full measure of relief to those who have suffered as a result of September 11. But the Fund will provide appropriate compensation and some measure of comfort to those whose lives have been torn asunder by the events of September 11.

Background.

The following discussion provides background information and explanation of the regulations promulgated herein. Section A describes the statutory backdrop for the regulations; Section B discusses the Department's rulemaking procedures to date; Section C addresses Eligibility; Section D pertains to Advance Benefits; Section E discusses Final Awards made by the Fund; Section F describes the Special Master's claims evaluation process; and Section G relates to Assistance to Claimants. The text of the regulations is set forth following these explanatory sections. A catalog of public commentary is set forth thereafter as an Appendix. More detailed information regarding the program, including a flow chart of applicable procedures and a table of estimated or "presumed" awards, will be available on the Victims Compensation Fund website at www.usdoj.gov/victimcompensation.

A. The Statute.

The President signed the "September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund") into law on September 22, 2001, as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act") ("the Act"). The purpose of this Fund is to provide compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and compensation through a "personal representative" for those who died as a result of the crashes. Generally, eligibility is limited to: (1) individuals on the planes at the time of the crashes (other than the terrorists); and (2) individuals present at the World Trade Center, the Pentagon or the site of the crash in Pennsylvania at the time of the crashes or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes.

The Fund is designed to provide a no-fault alternative to tort litigation for individuals who were physically injured or killed as a result of the aircraft hijackings and crashes on September 11, 2001. Others who may have suffered losses as a result of those events (e.g., those without identifiable physical injuries but who lost employment) are not included in this special program. Indeed, compensation will be provided only for losses caused on account of personal physical injuries or death, even though the victims may have suffered other losses, such as property loss. For this reason, the Department and the Special Master anticipate that all awards believes he or she is entitled. A number of commenters argued that the statute necessitated an entirely individualized determination of noneconomic losses in every case. A group representing survivors of decedents suggested that noneconomic losses must be uncapped and based, in part, on the number and age of any surviving children or dependents, the current and future pain and suffering experienced by the victim's family, and the severity of pain suffered by the victim himself or herself.

(4) Taxation

A number of commenters raised questions about the taxability of various kinds of awards issued under the Fund. Several commenters asserted that compensation from the Fund should be nontaxable under federal law, similar to various types of tort awards. Another commenter stated that state victim compensation fund awards generally are not taxable, either by the state or the federal government. On the other hand, another commenter stated he did not see the purpose of distributing taxpayers' money to victims, and urged taxing the awards so as to return some of the money to the Treasury.

Collateral Sources

The Department sought comments on the issue of collateral sources. Although the Act requires that collateral sources be deducted from awards issued under the Fund (and explicitly outlines examples of certain types of collateral sources), the Department invited comment as to how the term "collateral source" should be defined.

(1) General Comments

Despite the explicit language in the Act, a number of commenters took issue with deducting any collateral sources whatsoever. Although many recognized that both the Department and the Special Master are bound to follow the language in the Act, they nonetheless argued that collateral sources are -- in many states -- not offset in wrongful death suits. Some urged that the type of collateral source offsets should be interpreted narrowly. A number of commenters also suggested that if collateral source benefits to a victim are to be offset, a counter-offset should be made for the premiums or contributions made by the victim to purchase various benefits. Others specifically suggested that only the value of collateral benefits funded by a victim's employer should be offset.

Many commenters, however, asserted that the program should not "unjustly enrich" the victims or their survivors, and supported the use of widespread offsets. Some of these comments mentioned that -- although the statute does not provide either a ceiling or floor for the amount of awards -- the Fund may have only a limited pool of resources to distribute to claimants (akin to the funds being collected and distributed by charitable organizations), and suggested the need to help those most in need. Other comments noted that unjust enrichment should not flow through tax-payer dollars. It was mentioned that many taxpayers -- who ultimately will provide the funds under the program -- also sent in charitable contributions not to unjustly enrich victims or their families, but, rather, solely to help them through these troubled times.

(2) "A claimant has received or is entitled to receive"

Some commenters specifically focused on the word "claimant" in the phrase "a claimant has received or is entitled to receive," and urged that any collateral source benefits not paid or to be paid directly to the claimant not be deducted from the award. These comments were often parallel to those concerning the question of whose losses are to be compensated under the Fund:

only those of the decedent (estate), or those of others as well. (See the discussion of Eligibility.)

A number of comments also focused on the words "entitled to receive." Some recommended that only those collateral benefits scheduled to be paid as a result of contractual or other clear obligations should be deducted from an award. Others recommended that only the present value of any future contingent awards be considered in making any offset.

(3) Life Insurance

Many commenters were frustrated that the Act requires life insurance proceeds to be deducted from awards. Many asserted that deducting life insurance will penalize those who planned ahead. One suggested that life insurance should only be offset if payable to a dependent of the victim, and another group of commenters indicated that only the sums received by the eligible applicant net of all taxes that exceed the premiums -- or other payments made by the applicant -- be deducted. A number suggested that if life insurance is to be offset, the premiums paid should be returned to the victim by reducing the amount of the benefit offset.

(4) Pensions

While similar concerns (as to life insurance) were raised in connection with pensions, a more common comment concerned the meaning of the term "pension." For example, some commenters noted that pensions are not normally considered to be "compensation for a loss" but are instead akin to savings.

(5) Workers Compensation And Victim Assistance Programs

One commenter pointed out that most of the victims may be eligible for workers' compensation benefits because they were killed while on the job. Further, with respect to those receiving benefits under New York law, the compensation insurer can terminate workers' compensation payments -- absent claimants obtaining consent to enter the Fund -- if benefits are being paid to the injured workers or survivors. New York State legal authorities confirmed the noteworthiness of this issue, and recommended that workers' compensation payments not be considered a collateral source to this extent.

With respect to state victim assistance funds, one commenter noted that 42 U.S.C. § 10602(e) -- which generally provides that state crime victim boards may refuse to pay out benefits if another Federal program is paying benefits -- was explicitly amended to exclude payments made under the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001. The commenter suggested that some programs covered under that code provision -- that have already made payments -- may be entitled to reimbursement as a result.

(6) Charitable Contributions

Many victims of the terrorist-related crashes on September 11, 2001, have or may receive support from special funds set up to assist them, as well as from special programs established by some of their employers to share future profits and the like. Accordingly, whether to reduce Fund awards by the amount of such contributions was one of the issues given the most attention in the comments. Notably, this issue was discussed in a number of news articles at about the time the Notice of Inquiry was issued.

Commenters were heavily divided on this issue. Many were strongly opposed to reducing awards by the amount of charity funding received. This includes some commenters who donated to charities established for this purpose, as well as employers who established funds to help the families of the victims. Many insisted that funds collected by employers solely for the purpose of compensating victims of the September 11 attacks should not be deemed a collateral source. Many drew a distinction between funds provided for short-term assistance and need, and those designed to compensate victims for their losses.

On the other hand, a number of comments from those who contributed money to various charities viewed the purposes of the charities and the Fund as one and the same; namely, compensating the victims. These commenters asserted they had not intended making contributions to unjustly enrich the families, and would hesitate to make such contributions in the future if their help turns out only to ensure persons maintain a certain lifestyle.

A number of commenters also pointed to the practical difficulties of trying to establish what claimants may have received from charities. Some suggested the Fund should have access to any database of charitable contributions, including one that was reported to be under consideration in New York.

After discussing these factors, some commenters suggested that the Special Master only offset charitable contributions over a certain amount. A few commenters suggested only offsetting charities set up for longer term assistance to the victims (e.g., tuition funds or scholarships for the children of all the victims).

Payment of Awards

Some commenters expressed the view that payments by the fund should be in the form of "structured settlements" or annuities rather than in lump sum. One commenter suggested payments to children should go to a trustee for the benefit of the child. However, other commenters argued for lump sum payments and objected to the government placing any restrictions on the claimants' award.

Limitations on Fees for Assistance And Payment by the Special Master

The Department requested comments on whether the Special Master has the authority to limit the types and amounts of fees that can be charged by counsel, accountants, experts or others who are retained by claimants to assist them to file and pursue compensation claims, and whether such fees can and should be paid by the Special Master directly out of compensation awards. The Department also solicited comments on what limitations, if any, the rules should impose on non-attorney, non-claimant representatives' participation in filing claims.

A number of commenters noted that the right to be represented by counsel is provided by the statute, that not all claimants would be comfortable using pro-bono counsel to represent their interests, and that payment of attorneys' fees is necessary to ensure representation by counsel of choice. Some of these commenters suggested, however, that fees could be limited so as not to exceed 10% of the award to claimant. Paradoxically, some commenters opposed using any amount of money from the Fund to pay legal fees.

from the Fund will be free of federal taxation. See I.R.C. § 104(a)(2) (stating that damages received "on account of personal physical injuries or physical sickness" are excludable from gross income for purposes of federal income taxation).

A claimant who files for compensation waives any right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any federal or state court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for actions to recover collateral source obligations.

Determinations on eligibility and the amount of compensation are to be made by the Special Master. After determining whether an individual is an eligible claimant under the Act, the Special Master is to determine the amount of compensation to be awarded based upon the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant.

The law also provides that the Special Master is to make a final determination on any claim within 120 days from when the claim was filed and, if an award is made, to authorize payment within 20 days thereafter. The determinations of the Special Master are final and are not reviewable by any court. Claims with the Fund must be filed on or before two years after the effective date of these regulations, i.e. [insert date 2 years from date of this publication in the FEDERAL REGISTER]. Payments from the Fund are made by the United States Government, which in turn obtains the right of subrogation to each award.

Pursuant to the Act, regulations addressing certain administrative matters must be issued within 90 days of enactment. Section 407 of the Act provides that the Department, in consultation with the Special Master, promulgate regulations on four matters by December 21, 2001:

- (1) Forms to be used in submitting claims;
- (2) The information to be included in such forms;
- (3) Procedures for hearing and the presentation of evidence; and
- (4) Procedures to assist an individual in filing and pursuing claims under this title.

In addition, section 407 authorizes, but does not require, the Department to issue additional rules to implement the program. This Interim Final Rule addresses issues beyond the four specifically required by the Act in order to create a program that will be efficient, will treat similarly situated claimants alike, and will allow potential claimants to make informed decisions regarding whether to file claims with the Fund. Nonetheless, the Department recognizes that it cannot anticipate all of the issues that will arise over the course of the program and that there will inevitably be many difficult issues that the Special Master will have to resolve in the course of making determinations on individual claims.

B. Rulemaking history to date.

On November 5, 2001, the Department requested public input on a number of issues. 66 FR 55901. The Department noted that, at that time, the Special Master had not yet been appointed, but that it wanted as much public comment as feasible before issuing the regulations by December 21, 2001. On November 26, 2001, the Attorney General appointed Kenneth R. Feinberg as Special Master. As called for by the Act, this interim final rule is promulgated in consultation with the Special Master.

The Department received more than 800 comments in response to the Department's Notice of Inquiry. Some were very brief and only spoke to a single issue; others responded to the Department's questions on a point by point basis. Still others contained detailed analyses, recommendations and even proposed regulatory language.

The range of commenters was very broad. Some commenters identified themselves as citizens, taxpayers or law professors, and many identified themselves as individuals who had contributed to charities for those impacted by the terrorist crashes. Many other commenters identified themselves as members of victims' families, partners or close friends, including some from organizations and groups of survivors. Several commenters identified themselves as employers who lost a significant number of employees in the crashes. A number of commenters identified themselves as residents of housing near "Ground Zero" in New York.

In addition, the Department received comments from many organizations including the American Insurance Association, the American Arbitration Association, the American Bar Association, Trial Lawyers Care, New York Trial Lawyers' Association, New York City Bar Association, Massachusetts Bar Association, National Center for Victims of Crime, National Association of Crime Victim Compensation Boards, the Oklahoma Crime Victim Compensation Board, Consumers Union, Public Citizen, the National Right To Life Committee, the Lambda Legal Defense & Education Fund, the American Civil Liberties Union, the Association of Flight Attendants, the Council on Foundations, the Nonprofit Coordinating Committee of New York, Independent Sector, the Alternative Dispute Resolution of the Federal Bar Association, the Alliance of Fiduciary Consultants, and the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission.

Individual members of Congress, groups of members, and members of the Senate leadership also provided comments. Further, joint comments were submitted on behalf of the New York City Mayor, the New York Governor, and the New York Attorney General, by members of the New York Assembly, and by the Attorney General of Connecticut.

Comments were also submitted by United Airlines and American Airlines, and from various individuals and companies who identified themselves as having expertise or experience in the administration of claims programs.

The Department has read every submission it received in response to this notice, from handwritten notes to scholarly discussions. The Department wants to express its appreciation for the time and careful thought reflected in those submissions.

While the Department has reviewed every submission it received, it will not regulate on every topic addressed in those comments. Over 70 separate topics were identified; almost two dozen full size notebooks are necessary to organize all of the comments by topic. All of the comments will be retained by the Department for subsequent consideration when it reviews comments on this interim final rule, and the comments will remain posted on the Department's web site where they may be reviewed by the public. The Department was pleased to see that some comments responded to others placed on the web site, and hopes this facility will continue to be of interest to the public.

It is not feasible to repeat here all of the suggestions received in the comments, let alone directly respond to each. The Appendix to this interim final rulemaking highlights some of the points raised by commenters in order to indicate the range of views received on how various issues should be approached.

C. Eligibility.

Section 405(b) of the Act requires the Special Master to determine whether a claimant is an "eligible individual" under section 405(c). "Eligibility," in turn, is defined by the Act to include: (1) individuals (other than the terrorists) aboard American Airlines flights 11 and 77 and United Airlines flights 93 and 175; (2) individuals who were "present at" the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, or the site of the aircraft crash at Shanksville, Pennsylvania at the time or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes; or (3) personal representatives of deceased individuals who would otherwise be eligible. Moreover, to be eligible for an award, an individual must have suffered physical harm or death as a result of one of the terrorist-related air crashes. This interim final rule addresses eligibility by defining the terms "present at the site," "immediate aftermath," "physical harm," and "personal representative."

"Present at the site": This rule defines the term "present at the site" (i.e. the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville site) to mean physically present at the time of the crashes or immediate aftermath:

(1) In the buildings or portions of buildings that were destroyed as a result of the airplane crashes; or

(2) In any area contiguous to the crash sites that the Special Master determines was sufficiently close to the site that there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm resulting from the impact of the aircraft or any subsequent fire, explosions, or collapse of buildings (generally, the immediate area in which the impact occurred, fire occurred, portions of buildings fell, or debris fell upon and injured persons).

There are several reasons for this geographic limitation. First, this geographic limitation comports with the plain meaning of the statutory term "present at." Second, this geographic limitation is consistent with the further statutory requirement of physical injury or death, because the zone designated is that in which there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm from falling debris, explosions, or fire.

"Immediate aftermath": This rule defines the term "immediate aftermath" of the crashes to mean, for purposes of all claimants other than rescue workers, the period of time from the crashes until 12 hours after the crashes. This time frame appears to cover all of those who suffered physical injury or death, with the exception of rescue workers.

With respect to rescue workers who assisted in efforts to search for and recover victims, the regulations define "the immediate aftermath" to include the period from the crashes until 96 hours after the crashes. The regulations provide for this longer time period for rescue workers in recognition of their heroic efforts and their selfless reasons for being at the sites, and responds to a request by the Mayor of New York City that the program recognize the high level of danger and difficulty during the first four days of rescue operations.

"Physical harm": This rule defines the term "physical harm" to mean an objectively verifiable physical injury that was treated by a medical professional within 24 hours of the injury having been sustained or within 24 hours of rescue and either required hospitalization as an in-patient for at least 24 hours or caused, either temporarily or permanently, partial or total physical disability, incapacity, or disfigurement.

There are several reasons for this definition. The statutory term "physical harm" indicates that Congress did not intend for this Fund to compensate those who suffered only emotional harm or property damage. The statutory term "physical harm" also indicates that Congress did not intend for this Fund to cover those who face only a risk of future injury (i.e. latent harm that does not fully manifest itself within the statutory time period for this Fund). Indeed, because participation in this Fund precludes claimants from recovering through tort litigation, those with latent injuries that later became manifest would likely be undercompensated if they sought compensation now from the Fund before the injuries became manifest. Conversely, those who recovered for latent injuries that did not later become manifest could be overcompensated if they recovered from the Fund. While Congress might later consider whether an administrative program for latent harm caused by the September 11, 2001 terrorist-related aircraft crashes may be appropriate, the language of the statute that created this Fund does not contemplate awards for that purpose.

"Personal Representative": Section 405(c)(2)(C) provides that in the case of an individual who is deceased but who otherwise meets the other criteria for eligibility, a claim can be filed by the Personal Representative of the decedent. Section 405(c)(3)(A) provides that no more than one claim may be submitted by an individual or on behalf of a deceased individual.

In many or most cases, the identity of the "Personal Representative" will not be in dispute. Where there are disputes, two issues arise: (1) what are the rules for determining who is the Personal Representative?; and (2) who should apply the rules and resolve the dispute?

As to the first issue, the regulations rely on state law. Subject to certain contingencies, this rule defines the term "Personal Representative" to mean an individual appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction as the Personal Representative of the decedent or as the executor or administrator of the decedent's will or estate. In the event that no Personal Representative or executor or administrator has been appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction, and such issue is not the subject of pending litigation or other dispute, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative is the person named by the decedent in the decedent's will as the executor or administrator. In the event no will exists, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative is the first person in the line of succession established by the laws of the state of the decedent's domicile governing intestacy.

Reliance on state law is necessary in part because those who file for recovery under the Fund waive their rights to recover through litigation, in which state law would determine the identity of the appropriate representatives of the decedent, or the decedent's estate, to bring suit. Thus, if the identity of Personal Representatives for purposes of this Fund were determined by federal regulation, there could be many situations in which the representative as defined by state law would choose litigation while the Personal Representative as defined by federal regulation would seek to recover from the Fund.

The second issue raises questions of program administration. Disputes between relatives, former spouses and other interested parties can be exceptionally fact-intensive and time-consuming. Indeed, state courts often spend considerable time and resources resolving such matters. The Special Master cannot accomplish his statutory duties if bogged down with these types of complex disputes. Nor would it be advisable for the Special Master to attempt to step in and supplant state court practice or the testamentary intent of decedents. Consequently, the rule provides that the Special Master has no obligation to arbitrate, litigate or otherwise resolve disputes as to the identity of the Personal Representative. Instead, to ensure that funds are not needlessly tied up due to disputes regarding the identity of the Personal Representative, the regulations provide that the disputing parties may agree in writing to the identity of a Personal Representative to act on their behalf, who may seek and accept payment from the Fund while those disputing parties work to settle their dispute. In appropriate cases, the Special Master may determine an award, but place the payment in escrow until the dispute regarding the Personal Representative is finally resolved.

Finally, the determination of the Personal Representative is not the same question as the determination of who ultimately will receive the award. In that regard, this rule provides that the Personal Representative shall distribute the award in a manner consistent with the law of the decedent's domicile or any applicable rulings made by a court of competent jurisdiction.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Office of the Attorney General

28 CFR Part 104

CIV 104P; AG Order No.

RIN: 1105-AA79

September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001

ACTION: Interim final rule with request for comments.

SUMMARY: Shortly after the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, the President signed the "September 11 Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund") into law as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act") (the "Act"). The Act authorizes compensation to any individual (or the personal representative of a deceased individual) who was physically injured or killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes on that day. The Act provides that the Fund will be administered by a Special Master appointed by the Attorney General. On November 26, 2001, the Attorney General appointed Kenneth R. Feinberg as Special Master.

The Department of Justice, in consultation with the Special Master, is issuing certain procedural rules so the Special Master may commence operations of the program as soon as practicable. In order to allow the Special Master to begin distributing funds, the Department is issuing this rule as an "Interim Final Rule" that will have the force and effect of law immediately upon publication. This rule is designated "interim," however, because the Department is also seeking further comment for a period of 30 days as part of its further review and may expand or adjust aspects of the rule after receiving additional comments.

However, in order to assure that the families of needy victims receive adequate compensation, the regulations further provide that the Personal Representative shall, before payment is authorized, provide to the Special Master a plan for distribution of any award received from the Fund. Notwithstanding any other provision of these regulations or any other provision of state law, in the event that the Special Master concludes that the Personal Representative's plan for distribution does not appropriately compensate the victim's spouse, children, or other relatives, the Special Master may direct the Personal Representative to distribute all or part of the award to such spouse, children, or other relatives.

D. Advance Benefits

In order to comply with the Attorney General's November 26, 2001 instructions to the Special Master to pay benefits to eligible claimants as quickly as possible, these regulations permit claimants to seek immediate "Advance Benefits" in the fixed amount of $50,000 in the case of deceased individuals and $25,000 in the case of severely injured individuals who required hospitalization for one week or more.

To qualify for advance benefits, applicants must complete a short form (the "Eligibility Form") identifying basic eligibility and indicating that advance benefits would assist them in confronting current or immediate financial hardships. Such forms will be made available at claims intake centers as they are established, in response to telephone requests (888-714-3385, 202-305-1352, TDD: 888-560-0844), and on the Victims Compensation Fund website at www.usdoj.gov/victimcompensation.

Eligible claimants may apply for and receive advance benefits and then file their lengthier "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" at any time within the two-year time frame for filing claims under the program. This will allow needy eligible claimants to obtain prompt advance payments even though they may need more time to collect full information regarding the amount of compensation they seek. The 120-day period for determination of compensation will be stayed or tolled until the claimant files the completed "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" needed to allow the Special Master to determine the amount of the final award. However, once a claimant applies for Advance Benefits and is deemed eligible to recover under the Fund, the claimant will be deemed to have waived the right to file a civil action in state or federal court for damages sustained as a result of the September 11 attacks.

Advance benefits will be treated as advance payments on ultimate awards from the Fund. Thus, the amount of any advance benefits received will be deducted from the claimant's subsequent award.

E. Final awards made by the Fund.

Section 405(b) of the Act provides that the Special Master shall compensate eligible claimants based on the harm to the claimant (including both economic loss and noneconomic losses), the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant. The Act further provides that the Special Master shall determine the claimant's eligibility and the amount of compensation within 120 days.

The Special Master and the Department have studied the language of the Act, the varying public comments, evidence and data about the many victims of the September 11 attacks, and economic and demographic studies and data in fashioning the interim final rule. After this careful consideration, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that the following principal objectives should guide any determination of economic and noneconomic losses.

The first objective is that the process should be efficient, straightforward, and understandable to the claimants. This objective is based in part upon the statutory requirement that the Special Master review each claim and make an award determination within 120 days of filing. More important, however, is that claimants be able to enter the program -- or choose not to enter the program -- with an understanding of how their claims will be treated. This is especially important because the Act provides that, upon submission of a claim, a claimant waives the right to file a civil action for damages sustained as a result of the September 11 attacks. For claimants to make an informed decision regarding this waiver, they should have some understanding of how their award will be calculated and how much they would receive from the Fund should they decide to file a claim.

The second objective is that each claimant should, to the greatest extent possible, be treated fairly based on the claimant's own individual circumstances and relative to other claimants. While the circumstances of death for many victims will differ, those circumstances will in many cases be unknowable. In principle, similarly situated claimants should not receive dramatically differing treatment.

After careful consideration, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that, in order best to achieve these principal objectives, the Special Master should develop a methodology for calculating presumed economic and noneconomic losses that is based on readily identifiable individual circumstances for each claimant, such as age, prior income levels, marital status, and the number and ages of the victim's dependents. A methodology for determining presumed economic and noneconomic losses will also assist the Special Master in making fair and appropriate compensation determinations swiftly and efficiently within the time frame permitted by the Act.

In order to enable claimants to make informed decisions regarding whether to submit a claim under the Fund and, if so, whether to submit evidence of extraordinary individual circumstances that could justify departure from the presumed awards, the interim final rule directs the Special Master to publish schedules, tables, or charts of presumed determinations for economic and noneconomic losses. While these schedules, tables, or charts cannot cover every possible claimant (e.g., injured claimants), they are extensive and detailed enough to provide the majority of potential claimants with a general dollar range into which their awards may fall.

Nonetheless, the Special Master and the Department recognize that it will be impossible to fashion a presumptive methodology that will take into account all of the individual facts and circumstances for every claimant. Rather, some claimants may have extraordinary individual circumstances that justify departure from the presumed awards. Thus, the interim final rule provides that claimants may request that the Special Master depart from the presumed economic and noneconomic losses based upon a demonstration of extraordinary circumstances that the presumed award methodology does not adequately address.

Economic loss: Determination of economic loss requires a prediction about each claimant's future. This assessment will be, by its nature, somewhat speculative. While the determination of economic loss should be based upon facts regarding the individual victim where those facts are available, some facts cannot be predicted on an individualized basis.

The regulations also provide that the Special Master's schedules, tables, or charts should identify presumed determinations of economic loss up to a salary level commensurate with the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States. The Department recognizes that projecting earnings over worklife for people with extraordinary annual incomes is a very complex exercise, often requiring a detailed evaluation of variable and often complex formulae for nonvariable income, differing work life expectations, often highly volatile industries or markets, and other factors that are not often subject to easy generalization. We have also concluded that the purpose of the Act is not simply to examine economic and noneconomic harm, but also to provide compensation that is just and appropriate in light of the financial needs and resources of claimants. Any methodology that does nothing more than attempt to replicate a theoretically possible future income stream would lead to awards that would be insufficient relative to the needs of some victims' families, and excessive relative to the needs of others. Therefore, a claimant should not assume that he or she will receive an award greater than the presumed award simply because the victim had an income that exceeded the income for the 98th percentile. Indeed, the Act's requirement that the Special Master consider "the individual circumstances of the claimant" indicates that the Special Master may consider a particular claimant's financial needs and resources, just as the Department and the Special Master considered the needs of the claimants in concluding that no claimant bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim should receive less than $500,000 or $300,000 before collateral source offsets.

If a claimant seeks review of a presumed award, the Special Master may consider a range of information, including demographic information on retirement trends for high wage earners, the individual's historical expenses, savings, and any other factors he deems relevant, including economic trends, information available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Census Bureau and other entities on average income and retirement age for the victim's profession or even for the victim's former employer. Claimants should not expect awards grossly in excess of the highest awards listed on the Special Master's presumed award chart, as the individual circumstances of the wealthiest and highest-income claimants will often indicate that multi-million dollar awards out of the public coffers are not necessary to provide them with a strong economic foundation from which to rebuild their lives.

The Special Master and the Department recognize that the extent of physical injury for those victims who survived the September 11 attacks may vary to a degree that does not lend itself to a schedule, table, or chart. If the claimant's injury causes only a temporary disability, the Special Master may consider evidence regarding the length of time the claimant was absent from his employment in determining the appropriate compensation for economic loss. For those victims who suffered permanent physical disability, the Special Master may rely upon his economic loss methodology, but adjust the award based upon the extent of the physical disability. In evaluating claims of disability, the Special Master will, in general, make a determination regarding whether the claimant is capable of performing his or her usual profession in light of the injuries.

With respect to claims of total permanent disability, the Special Master may accept a determination of disability made by the Social Security Administration as evidence of disability without any further medical evidence or review. The Special Master may also consider determinations of permanent total disability made by other governmental agencies or private insurers in evaluating the claim. The Special Master may require an evaluation of the claimant's disability and ability to perform his or her occupation from medical experts.

With respect to claims of partial disability, the Special Master may consider evidence of the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to perform his or her usual occupation as well as the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to participate in usual daily activities.

Noneconomic losses: Each person who was killed or injured in the September 11 attacks suffered grievous harm, and each person experienced the unspeakable events of that day in a unique way. Some victims experienced terror for many minutes, as they were held hostage by terrorists on an airplane or trapped in a burning building. Some victims had no warning of what was coming and died within seconds of a plane hitting the building in which they worked. While these circumstances may be knowable in a few extraordinary circumstances, for the vast majority of victims these circumstances are unknowable.

After extensive fact finding, public outreach, and review of public comments, the Special Master and the Department have concluded that the most rational and just way to approach the imponderable task of placing a dollar amount upon the pain, emotional suffering, loss of enjoyment of life, and mental anguish suffered by the thousands of victims of the September 11 attacks is to assess the noneconomic losses for categories of claimants. The most obvious distinction is between those who died and those who suffered physical injury but survived.

The regulations therefore set a presumed award for noneconomic losses sustained. For those victims who died as a result of the September 11 aircraft crashes, the presumed noneconomic losses will be $250,000, plus an additional $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent of the deceased victim. That $250,000 figure is roughly equivalent to the amounts received under existing federal programs by public safety officers who are killed while on duty, or members of our military who are killed in the line of duty while serving our nation. See 38 U.S.C. § 1967 (military personnel); 42 U.S.C. § 3796 (Public Safety Officers Benefit Program). The latter figures -- $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent -- include a noneconomic component of "replacement services loss."

For those victims who suffered physical injury but survived the September 11 attacks, the Special Master may establish a methodology for estimating their noneconomic losses. The Special Master may determine that it is appropriate to give some percentage of the noneconomic loss award given for victims who died, based upon the extent of the injury.

The Special Master and the Department recognize, however, that no presumed award can take into account all of the unique individual circumstances of each claimant. Accordingly, as noted above, claimants may either accept the presumed award or instead attempt to demonstrate in a hearing before the Special Master extraordinary circumstances that justify departure from the presumed award.

Collateral Sources: Section 405(b)(6) of the Act provides that the Special Master shall

reduce the amount of compensation by the amount of the collateral source compensation "a claimant has received or is entitled to receive" as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. The interim final rule provides that collateral sources will include life insurance, pension funds, death benefit programs, and payments by federal, state, or local governments related to the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. While many public commenters voiced strong opposition to the inclusion of some or all of these as collateral source compensation, the Act expressly includes each one within the definition of "collateral sources."

At the same time, the Act does not address whether certain other types of payments constitute collateral source compensation. The interim final rule provides that the following are not collateral source compensation:

(1) The value of services or in-kind charitable gifts such as provision of emergency housing, food, or clothing; and

(2) Charitable donations distributed to the beneficiaries of the decedent, to the injured claimant, or to the beneficiaries of the injured claimant by private charitable entities; provided, however, that the Special Master may determine that funds provided to victims or their families through a private charitable entity constitute, in substance, a collateral source as described above.

The Department has concluded that charitable contributions should not be considered collateral source compensation within the meaning of the Act because, among other reasons, such charitable contributions are different in kind from the collateral sources listed in the Act. Moreover, because the collateral offset only applies to collateral source compensation that the claimant has received or is entitled to receive, deducting charitable awards from the amount of compensation would have the perverse effect of encouraging potential donors to withhold their giving until after claimants have received their awards from the Fund.

F. The claims evaluation process.

Section 405(b)(4) of the Act provides that a claimant, after the filing of the claim, has the right to present evidence to the Office of the Special Master. The statute specifically provides that the claimant has the right to present witness statements and documents, the right to obtain legal counsel, and such other due process rights as are determined to be appropriate by the Special Master.

The interim final regulations provide claimants with a choice of two Procedural Options -- Track A or Track B. If a claimant selects Track A, the Claims Evaluator will determine eligibility and the claimant's presumed award and, within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination, the amount of the presumed award, and the right to request a hearing before the Special Master or his designee under § 104.33 of these regulations. After an eligible claimant has been notified of the presumed award, the claimant may either accept the presumed compensation determination as the final determination and request payment, or may instead request a review before the Special Master or his designee pursuant to § 104.33. If a claimant opts for a review, the claimant may make supplemental submissions. The Special Master may alter or modify the award if the presumed award was calculated erroneously, or if the claimant demonstrates extraordinary circumstances indicating that the presumed award does not adequately address the claimant's injury. There will be no further review or appeal from this determination.

If the claimant selects Track B, a Claims Evaluator will determine eligibility within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, but shall not determine the claimant's presumed award. The Claims Evaluator will then notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination. Upon notification of eligibility, the claimant will proceed to a hearing pursuant to § 104.33. At such hearing, the Special Master or his designee will utilize the presumed award methodology, but may modify or vary the award if the claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumed award methodology. There shall be no review or appeal from this determination.

Hearings, when sought, will be held by the Special Master or his designee. These hearings shall be conducted in a nonadversarial manner, the objective of which will be to permit the claimant to present information or evidence that the claimant believes is necessary to a full understanding of the claim. Claimants will be permitted, but not required, to present witnesses, including expert witnesses. The hearing officer shall be permitted to examine the credentials of experts.

The hearings shall be limited in length to a time period determined by the Special Master or the relevant hearing officer, but generally not to exceed two hours. The hearings shall, to the extent practicable, be scheduled at times and in locations convenient to the claimant or his or her representative. The claimant shall be entitled to be represented by an attorney in good standing, but it is not necessary that the claimant be represented by an attorney.

G. Assistance to claimants.

In its November 5, 2001 Notice of Inquiry, the Department noted that section 405(a) of the Act establishes some specific requirements with respect to the claim form and the information to be included. The law requires the Special Master to develop a claim form to use in filing claims for compensation under this program. The Special Master is to ensure that the form can be filed electronically if it is determined to be practicable. Moreover, by law, the form must include a statement of the factual basis for eligibility and information regarding income in recent years. In addition, the form is to request information from the claimant as to: (1) the physical harm suffered by a victim, or information confirming the death of the victim, as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001; (2) income tax returns for recent years and other records; and (3) documentation regarding collateral source compensation including life insurance policies and government or employment-related programs which have or may provide funds or benefits to the claimant.

The Department believes that it is important that this Fund be accessible to potential claimants who have limited resources and who are not trained in the law. Rather than attempt to address in detail the means by which the Special Master should provide assistance to claimants, these regulations leave the Special Master with discretion to implement steps to provide assistance to claimants and to make this Fund accessible to them.

Because the Act does not provide for payment of legal or other fees by the Fund, these regulations do not impose any limits on the types or amount of fees that claimants may pay their attorneys or others providing assistance. Although the Department's regulations do not set specific limits on attorneys fees separate from those existing in state law or attorney ethical standards, the Department believes that contingency arrangements exceeding 5% of a claimant's recovery from the Fund would not be in the best interest of the claimants.

The Department contemplates that the Special Master will have discretion to inform potential claimants of the nature of the Fund so that they may make informed decisions regarding the types or amount of fees that they pay for legal or other assistance. For example, the Special Master may notify claimants and potential claimants of the availability of free legal services. Likewise, the Special Master may inform claimants and potential claimants that the Fund is a no-fault, administrative scheme that should not involve the kind of risks and expense that would justify any significant contingency fees.

These regulations similarly do not address the manner in which claimants may use funds that they receive from the Fund, except that the Personal Representatives must agree in an acknowledgment and release form to distribute the award to the beneficiaries of the decedent in accordance with the decedent's will or applicable state law or ruling by a court of competent jurisdiction. While the Department does not believe that it is appropriate for the Special Master to place further legal restrictions on the claimants' or beneficiaries' use of payments from the Fund, the Department does contemplate that the Special Master will have discretion to provide claimants with information regarding annuities or other financial planning devices or to offer structured awards with periodic payments.

Application of various laws and Executive Orders to this rulemaking.

Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. 553

This rule provides for compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured and to the personal representatives of those who were killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. In order to provide compensation to eligible claimants as expeditiously as possible, Congress set a short 90-day deadline for the issuance of these regulations. The Department did seek public input on the issues, but it was not possible for the Department to prepare and publish a proposed rule for notice and comment within that very short time period.

The APA provides that an agency need not go through proposed rulemaking and comment before issuing rules to implement benefits programs. 5 U.S.C. 553(a)(2). Moreover, the Department, in consultation with the Special Master, determined that taking the time to draft and publish a proposed rule for notice and comment before this rule took effect would have been impracticable in light of the short time between the enactment of the statute and the deadline for rulemaking, and also would have been contrary to the public interest, which strongly favors prompt disbursement of benefits. Accordingly, the Department has determined that there is "good cause" for exempting this rule from the provision of the Administrative Procedure Act that requires a notice of proposed rulemaking and the opportunity for public comment. 5 U.S.C. 553(b)(B).

For the same reasons, the Department also finds "good cause" for exempting this rule from the provision of the Administrative Procedure Act providing for a delayed effective date. 5 U.S.C. 553(d). Delaying the opportunity for eligible claimants to seek Advance Benefits or to file claims under the Act would be contrary to the public interest.

Congressional Review Act

The Administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs of the Office of Management and Budget has designated this interim final rule as a "major rule" as that term is defined by the Congressional Review Act ("CRA"), 5 U.S.C. 801 et. seq. Pursuant to section 808(2) of the CRA, the Department finds that "good cause" exists for establishing an effective date for this rule upon publication because delay would be impracticable in light of the short time between the enactment of the statute and the deadline for rulemaking, and also would be contrary to the public interest favoring prompt disbursement of benefits.

Privacy Act of 1974

The Department of Justice, Civil Division is establishing a new Privacy Act system of records entitled "September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001, JUSTICE/CIV-008." By law, regulations addressing certain administrative matters for the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 must be issued within the 90-day period established by Congress. The Privacy Act notice will be published with no routine uses, so that it will be effective on the date published. It is likely that amendments to this notice, including routine uses, will be published at a later date, with the opportunity to comment. In the interim, disclosures necessary to process claims will be made only with the written consent of claimants or as otherwise authorized under 5 U.S.C. 552a(b).

Regulatory Flexibility Act

These regulations set forth procedures by which the Federal government will award compensation benefits to eligible victims of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. Under 5 U.S.C. 601(6), the term "small entity" does not include the Federal government, the party charged with incurring the costs attendant to the implementation and administration of the Victims Compensation Fund. To the extent that small entities, including small government entities, will be economically affected by the promulgation of these regulations, such effects will likely be minimal. Further, the number of entities that will be affected will, in all probability, fall short of a "substantial number" of small entities. In fact, the Department believes that the promulgation of these rules will play a considerable role in reducing the amount of complex, private litigation, wherein a substantial number of small (and large) entities would undoubtedly be significantly impacted.

Accordingly, the Department has reviewed this rule in accordance with the Regulatory Flexibility Act (5 U.S.C. 605(b)) and by approving it certifies that this rule will not have a significant economic impact on a substantial number of small entities because it provides compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and compensation through a "personal representative" for those who were killed as a result of those crashes. This rule provides compensation to individuals, not to entities.

Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995

This rule will not result in the expenditure by State, local and tribal governments, in the aggregate, or by the private sector, of $100,000,000 or more in any one year, and it will not significantly or uniquely affect small governments. Therefore, no actions were deemed necessary under the provisions of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995.

Executive Order 12866 - Regulatory Planning and Review

This regulation has been drafted and reviewed in accordance with Executive Order 12866, "Regulatory Planning and Review," section 1(b), Principles of Regulation. The Department of Justice has determined that this rule is a "significant regulatory action" under Executive Order 12866, section 3(f), Regulatory Planning and Review, and accordingly this rule has been reviewed by the Office of Management and Budget.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Statement by the Special Master

The September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 is an unprecedented expression of compassion on the part of the American people to the victims and their families devastated by the horror and tragedy of September 11. The Act itself (specifically Title IV – Victim Compensation), and the attached regulations drafted and implemented pursuant to the Act, are designed to bring some measure of financial relief to those most devastated by the events of

Executive Order 13132 - Federalism

This regulation will not have substantial direct effects on the States, on the relationship between the national government and the States, or on distribution of power and responsibilities among the various levels of government. Therefore, in accordance with Executive Order 13132, it is determined that this rule does not have sufficient federalism implications to warrant the preparation of a Federalism Assessment. However, the Department of Justice has worked cooperatively with state and local officials in the affected communities in the preparation of this rule. Also, the Department individually notified national associations representing elected officials of the initial request for comment and will be taking similar action in connection with the interim final rule.

Subpart A - General; Eligibility

§ 104.1 Purpose.

This part implements the provisions of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001, Title IV of Public Law 107-42, 115 Stat. 230 (Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act) to provide compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and to the "personal representatives" of those who were killed as a result of the crashes. All compensation provided through the Fund will be on account of personal physical injuries or death.

§ 104.2 Eligibility definitions and requirements.

(a) Eligible claimants. The term eligible claimants means:

(1) Individuals present at the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site at the time of or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes and who suffered physical harm, as defined herein, as a direct result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes;

(2) The Personal Representatives of deceased individuals aboard American Airlines flights 11 or 77 and United Airlines flights 93 or 175; and

(3) The Personal Representatives of individuals who were present at the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site at the time of or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes and who died as a direct result of the terrorist-related aircraft crash.

(4) The term eligible claimants does not include any individual or representative of an individual who is identified to have been a participant or conspirator in the terrorist-related crashes of September 11.

(b) Immediate aftermath. The term immediate aftermath of the crashes shall mean, for purposes of all claimants other than rescue workers, the period of time from the crashes until 12 hours after the crashes. With respect to rescue workers who assisted in efforts to search for and recover victims, the immediate aftermath shall include the period from the crashes until 96 hours after the crashes.

(c) Physical harm.

(1) The term physical harm shall mean a physical injury to the body that was treated by a medical professional within 24 hours of the injury having been sustained or within 24 hours of rescue; and

(i) Required hospitalization as an in-patient for at least 24 hours; or

(ii) Caused, either temporarily or permanently, partial or total physical disability, incapacity or disfigurement.

(2) In every case not involving death, the physical injury must be verified by contemporaneous medical records created by or at the direction of the medical professional who provided the medical care.

(d) Personal Representative. The term Personal Representative shall mean the person determined to be the Personal Representative under § 104.4 of this part.

(e) Present at the site. The term present at the site (i.e., the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville, Pennsylvania site) shall mean physically present at the time of the crashes or in the immediate aftermath:

(1) In the buildings or portions of buildings that were destroyed as a result of the airplane crashes; or

(2) In any area contiguous to the crash sites that the Special Master determines was sufficiently close to the site that there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm resulting from the impact of the aircraft or any subsequent fire, explosions, or building collapses (generally, the immediate area in which the impact occurred, fire occurred, portions of buildings fell, or debris fell upon and injured persons).

§ 104.3 Other definitions.

(a) Beneficiary. The term beneficiary shall mean a person entitled under the laws of the decedent's domicile to receive payments or benefits from the estate of or on behalf of the decedent on whose behalf the claim to the Fund was filed.

(b) Dependents. The Special Master shall identify as dependents those persons so identified by the victim on his or her federal tax return for the year 2000 unless:

(1) The claimant demonstrates that a minor child of the victim was born or adopted on or after January 1, 2001;

(2) Another person became a dependent in accordance with then-applicable law on or after January 1, 2001; or

(3) The victim was not required by law to file a federal income tax return for the year 2000.

(c) Spouse. The Special Master shall identify as the spouse of a victim the person reported as spouse on the victim's federal tax return for the year 2000 unless:

(1) The victim was married or divorced in accordance with applicable state law on or after January 1, 2001; or

(2) The victim was not required by law to file a federal income tax return for the year 2000.

(d) The Act. The Act, as used in this part, shall mean Public Law 107-42, 115 Stat. 230 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act"), 49 U.S.C. 40101 note.

(e) Victim. The term victim shall mean an eligible injured claimant or a decedent on whose behalf a claim is brought by an eligible Personal Representative.

§ 104.4 Personal Representative.

(a) In general. The Personal Representative shall be:

(1) An individual appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction as the Personal Representative of the decedent or as the executor or administrator of the decedent's will or estate.

(2) In the event that no Personal Representative or executor or administrator has been appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction, and such issue is not the subject of pending litigation or other dispute, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative for purposes of compensation by the Fund is the person named by the decedent in the decedent's will as the executor or administrator of the decedent's estate. In the event no will exists, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative for purposes of compensation by the Fund is the first person in the line of succession established by the laws of the decedent's domicile governing intestacy.

(b) Notice to beneficiaries. Any purported Personal Representative must, before filing an Eligibility Form, provide written notice of the claim (including a designated portion of the Eligibility Form) to the immediate family of the decedent (including, but not limited to, the decedent's spouse, former spouses, children, other dependents, and parents), to the executor, administrator, and beneficiaries of the decedent's will, and to any other persons who may reasonably be expected to assert an interest in an award or to have a cause of action to recover damages relating to the wrongful death of the decedent. Personal delivery or transmission by certified mail, return receipt requested, shall be deemed sufficient notice under this provision. The claim forms shall require that the purported Personal Representative certify that such notice (or other notice that the Special Master deems appropriate) has been given. In addition, as provided in § 104.21(b)(5) of this part, the Special Master may publish a list of individuals who have filed Eligibility Forms and the names of the victims for whom compensation is sought, but shall not publish the content of any such form.

(c) Objections to Personal Representatives. Objections to the authority of an individual to file as the Personal Representative of a decedent may be filed with the Special Master by parties who assert a financial interest in the award up to 30 days following the filing by the Personal Representative. If timely filed, such objections shall be treated as evidence of a "dispute" pursuant to paragraph (d) of this section.

(d) Disputes as to identity. The Special Master shall not be required to arbitrate, litigate, or otherwise resolve any dispute as to the identity of the Personal Representative. In the event of a dispute over the appropriate Personal Representative, the Special Master may suspend adjudication of the claim or, if sufficient information is provided, calculate the appropriate award and authorize payment, but place in escrow any payment until the dispute is resolved either by agreement of the disputing parties or by a court of competent jurisdiction. Alternatively, the disputing parties may agree in writing to the identity of a Personal Representative to act on their behalf, who may seek and accept payment from the Fund while the disputing parties work to settle their dispute.

§ 104.5 Foreign claims.

In the case of claims brought by or on behalf of foreign citizens, the Special Master may alter the requirements for documentation set forth herein to the extent such materials are unavailable to such foreign claimants.

§ 104.6 Amendments to this rule.

In the event that amendments are subsequently made to any section of this Part, claimants are entitled to have their claims processed in accordance with the provisions that were in effect at the time that their claims were submitted under § 104.21(d).

Subpart B - Filing for Compensation; Application for Advance Benefits

§ 104.21 Filing for compensation.

(a) Compensation form; "filing." Except for applications for Advance Benefits pursuant to § 104.22, no claim may be considered until the claimant has submitted both an "Eligibility Form" and either a "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or a "Death Compensation Form." A claim shall be deemed "filed" for purposes of section 405(b)(3) of the Act (providing that the Special Master shall issue a determination not later than 120 days after the date on which a claim is filed), and for any time periods in this part, when a Claims Evaluator determines that both the Eligibility Form and either a Personal Injury Compensation Form or a Death Compensation Form are substantially complete. Provided, however, that if a claimant files an Eligibility Form requesting Advance Benefits pursuant to § 104.22 of this part without filing either a "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or a "Death Compensation Form," the claim shall be deemed "filed" when the Claims Evaluator determines that the Eligibility Form is substantially complete, but the time period for determination and any time periods in this part shall be stayed or tolled as described in § 104.22(g) of this part.

(b) Eligibility Form. The Special Master shall develop an Eligibility Form that will require the claimant to provide information necessary for determining the claimant's eligibility to recover from the Fund.

(1) The Eligibility Form may require that the claimant certify that he or she has dismissed any pending lawsuit seeking damages as a result of the terrorist-related airplane crashes of September 11, 2001 (except for actions seeking collateral source benefits) within 90 days of the effective date of this part pursuant to section 405(c)(3)(B)(ii) of the Act and that there is no pending lawsuit brought by a dependent, spouse, or beneficiary of the victim.

(2) The Special Master may require as part of the notice requirement pursuant to § 104.4(b) that the claimant provide copies of a designated portion of the Eligibility Form to the immediate family of the decedent (including, but not limited to, the spouse, former spouses, children, other dependents, and parents), to the executor, administrator, and beneficiaries of the decedent's will, and to any other persons who may reasonably be expected to assert an interest in an award or to have a cause of action to recover damages relating to the wrongful death of the decedent.

(3) The Eligibility Form may require claimants to provide the following proof:

(i) Proof of death: Death certificate or similar official documentation;

(ii) Proof of presence at site: Documentation sufficient to establish presence at one of the crash sites, which may include, without limitation, a death certificate, records of employment, contemporaneous medical records, contemporaneous records of federal, state, city or local government, an affidavit or declaration of the decedent's or injured claimant's employer, or other sworn statement (or unsworn statement complying with 28 U.S.C. 1746) regarding the presence of the victim;

(iii) Proof of death on board aircraft: Death certificate or records of American or United Airlines or other sufficient official documentation;

(iv) Proof of physical harm: Contemporaneous medical records of hospitals, clinics, physicians, licensed medical personnel, or registries maintained by federal, state, or local government, and records of all continuing medical treatment;

(v) Personal Representative: Copies of relevant legal documentation, including court orders; letters testamentary or similar documentation; proof of the purported Personal Representative's relationship to the decedent; copies of wills, trusts, or other testamentary documents; and information regarding other possible beneficiaries as requested by the Eligibility Form;

(vi) Any other information that the Special Master deems necessary to determine the claimant's eligibility.

(4) The Special Master may also require waivers, consents, or authorizations from claimants to obtain directly from third parties tax returns, medical information, employment information, or other information that the Special Master deems relevant in determining the claimant's eligibility or award, and may request an opportunity to review originals of documents submitted in connection with the Fund.

(5) Application for Advance Benefits: The Eligibility Form shall include a section allowing claimants to indicate that they wish to apply for Advance Benefits. Claimants who apply for such Advance Benefits must certify on that Form that they have not yet received $450,000 in collateral source compensation if they are bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim with a spouse or dependent, $250,000 in collateral source compensation if they are bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim who was single with no dependents, or an amount in excess of their lost wages plus out-of-pocket medical expenses if they are an injured claimant. All such claimants also must state on the Form facts establishing financial hardship that would justify a determination that they are in need of Advance Benefits.

(6) The Special Master may publish a list of individuals who have filed Eligibility Forms and the names of the victims for whom compensation is sought, but shall not publish the content of any such form.

(c) Personal Injury Compensation Form and Death Compensation Form. The Special Master shall develop a Personal Injury Compensation Form that each injured claimant must submit. The Special Master shall also develop a Death Compensation Form that each Personal Representative must submit. These forms shall require the claimant to provide certain information that the Special Master deems necessary to determining the amount of any award, including information concerning income, collateral sources, benefits, and other financial information, and shall require the claimant to state the factual basis for the amount of compensation sought. It shall also allow the claimant to submit certain other information that may be relevant, but not necessary, to the determination of the amount of any award.

(1) Claimants shall, at a minimum, submit all tax returns that were filed for the years 1998, 1999, and 2000. The Special Master may, at his discretion, require that claimants submit copies of tax returns or other records for any other period of years he deems appropriate for determination of an award. The Special Master may also require waivers, consents, or authorizations from claimants to obtain directly from third parties medical information, employment information, or other information that the Special Master deems relevant to determining the amount of any award.

(2) Claimants may attach to the "Personal Injury Compensation Form" or "Death Compensation Form" any additional statements, documents or analyses by physicians, experts, September 11. In one important sense, the Fund symbolizes the commitment of the American people to those most in need. It is an example of how Americans rally around the less fortunate.

The attached regulations have two objectives: (1) to provide fair, predictable and consistent compensation to the victims of September 11 and their families throughout the life of the program; and (2) to do so in an expedited, efficient manner without unnecessary bureaucracy and needless demands on the victims. The regulations highlight a fast track administrative compensation program, eliminating the red tape, time and expense of a traditional lawsuit. Quick payment to eligible claimants characterizes this program.

The Fund offers the eligible claimant an alternative to litigation. To succeed in the courtroom, a victim of the September 11 tragedy, or his or her representative, would be compelled to litigate, probably for many years at excessive cost, and with all the uncertainty of result which is part of the litigation process. Among the hazards of such a court proceeding are: Would liability be demonstrated? Against whom? Would sufficient funds be available to pay in full any resulting tort award? Would the verdict, even if favorable, withstand appellate challenge?

Trade-offs are required in developing Fund procedures that are different than those in the more conventional lawsuit. It is possible to develop an alternative administrative scheme, providing speedy and efficient compensation, which will help bring some closure to the events of September 11. We should not require its victims to revisit the tragic events of September 11 over and over again during the pendency of a lawsuit in our courts.

In formulating the regulations, we heeded the instruction of the Attorney General to help the neediest of victims as quickly as possible. Accordingly, under these regulations, an eligible claimant can receive an immediate advance payment of $50,000 in cases involving death, or $25,000 in certain cases involving serious physical injury. These payments are downpayments only, advanced to provide immediate financial assistance to those in need.

advisors, or any other person or entity that the claimant believes may be relevant to a determination of compensation.

(d) Submission of a claim. Section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act provides that upon the submission of a claim under the Fund, the claimant waives the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any Federal or State court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for civil actions to recover collateral source obligations. A claim shall be deemed submitted for purposes of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act when the claim is deemed filed pursuant to § 104.21, regardless of whether any time limits are stayed or tolled.

(e) Provisions of information by third parties. Any third party having an interest in a claim brought by a Personal Representative may provide written statements or information regarding the Personal Representative's claim. The Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee may, at his or her discretion, include the written statements or information as part of the claim.

§ 104.22 Advance Benefits.

(a) Advance Benefits. Eligible Claimants may apply for immediate "Advance Benefits" in a fixed amount as follows:

- (1) $50,000 for Personal Representatives; and
- (2) $25,000 for injured claimants who meet the requirements of paragraph (d) of this section.

(b) Credit against award. The Advance Benefit shall be credited against any final compensation award so that the amount of the Advance Benefit is deducted from the final award under this program.

(c) Application for Advance Benefits. An otherwise eligible claimant may seek Advance Benefits to alleviate financial hardship faced by the claimant (or financial hardship faced by the beneficiaries of the decedent) by submitting an Eligibility Form described in § 104.21(b) and indicating thereon that he or she is applying for Advance Benefits.

(d) Eligibility for Advance Benefits. In the case of a Personal Representative, the claimant may be deemed eligible for Advance Benefits if a Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee determines that the claimant is eligible to recover under the Fund. In the case of an injured claimant, the claimant may be deemed eligible for Advance Benefits when the Special Master or his designee determines that the claimant is eligible to recover under the Fund and that the claimant's physical injury required hospitalization for one week or more.

(e) Authorization of payments.

(1) Payment in the amount described in paragraph (a) of this section will be authorized immediately upon a determination that the claimant is eligible for Advance Benefits and the claimant is:

(i) An injured claimant;

(ii) A Personal Representative who was the spouse of the deceased victim on September 11, 2001; or

(iii) A Personal Representative who has obtained the consent of the spouse of the deceased victim (or, if there is no surviving spouse, all of the dependents of the deceased victim) to file for Advance Benefits.

(2) (i) With respect to other Personal Representatives, payment will be authorized within 15 days after the determination that the claimant is eligible for Advance Benefits, provided that no other individual has asserted a colorable conflicting claim as the Personal Representative with respect to the decedent and the Personal Representative identifies and has given notice to the beneficiaries to whom such Advance Benefits will be distributed.

(ii) In the event that a colorable conflicting claim has been asserted, no Advance Benefit will be paid until a final eligibility determination has been made.

(f) Waiver of the right to sue. As set forth in § 104.21(d) of this part, a claim shall be deemed submitted for purposes of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act when a claimant has filed an Eligibility Form and is determined by a Claims Evaluator or the Special Master or his designee to be an eligible claimant. The claimant will therefore have waived the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any Federal or State Court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for civil actions to recover collateral source obligations.

(g) Tolling of 120-day clock and other time periods. A claimant filing an Eligibility Form requesting Advance Benefits before filing a Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form will be deemed to have waived his right to commencement of the 120-day period in section 405(b)(3) of the Act (providing that the Special Master shall provide notice to the claimant of his determination within 120 days after the date on which a claim is filed). The 120-day period and all other time limitations in this part, except those applicable to Advance Benefit payments, shall be stayed or tolled until such time that a Claims Evaluator determines that the claimant's Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form is substantially complete.

Subpart C - Claim Intake, Assistance, and Review Procedures

§ 104.31 Procedure for claims evaluation.

(a) Initial review. Claims Evaluators shall review the forms filed by the claimant and either deem the claim "filed" (pursuant to 104.21(a)) or notify the claimant of any deficiency in the forms or any required documents.

(b) Procedural tracks. Each claim will be placed on a procedural track, described herein as "Track A" and "Track B," selected by the claimant on the Personal Injury Compensation Form or Death Compensation Form.

(1) Procedure for Track A. The Claims Evaluator shall determine eligibility and the claimant's presumed award pursuant to §§ 104.43 to 104.46 of this part and, within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination, the amount of the presumed award, and the right to request a hearing before the Special Master or his designee under § 104.33 of this part. After an eligible claimant has been notified of the presumed award, the claimant may either accept the presumed compensation determination as the final determination and request payment, or may instead request a review before the Special Master or his designee pursuant to § 104.33. Claimants found to be ineligible may appeal pursuant to § 104.32.

(2) Procedure for Track B. The Claims Evaluator shall determine eligibility within 45 days of the date the claim was deemed filed, but shall not determine the claimant's presumed award; the Claims Evaluator shall notify the claimant in writing of the eligibility determination. Upon notification of eligibility, the claimant will proceed to a hearing pursuant to § 104.33. At such hearing, the Special Master or his designee shall utilize the presumptive award methodology as set forth in §§ 104.43 to 104.46 of this part, but may modify or vary the award if the claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award methodology. There shall be no review or appeal from this determination.

(c) Multiple claims from the same family. The Special Master may treat claims brought by or on behalf of two or more members of the same immediate family as related or consolidated claims for purposes of determining the amount of any award.

§ 104.32 Eligibility review.

Any claimant deemed ineligible by the Claims Evaluator may appeal that decision to the Special Master or his designee by filing an eligibility appeal on forms created by the office of the Special Master.

§ 104.33 Hearing.

(a) Supplemental submissions. The claimant may prepare and file Supplemental Submissions within 21 calendar days from notification of either the presumed award (Track A) or eligibility (Track B). The Special Master shall develop forms appropriate for Supplemental Submissions.

(b) Conduct of hearings. Hearings shall be before the Special Master or his designee. The objective of hearings shall be to permit the claimant to present information or evidence that the claimant believes is necessary to a full understanding of the claim. The claimant may request that the Special Master or his designee review any evidence relevant to the determination of the award, including without limitation: factors and variables used in calculating economic loss; the identity of the victim's spouse and dependents; the financial needs of the claimant; facts affecting noneconomic loss; and any factual or legal arguments that the claimant contends should affect the award. Claimants shall be entitled to submit any statements or reports in writing. The Special Master or his designee may require authentication of documents, including medical records and reports, and may request and consider information regarding the financial resources and expenses of the victim's family or other material that the Special Master or his designee deems relevant.

(c) Location and duration of hearings. The hearings shall, to the extent practicable, be scheduled at times and in locations convenient to the claimant or his or her representative. The hearings shall be limited in length to a time period determined by the Special Master or his designee, but generally not to exceed two hours. The claimant may elect whether the hearing shall be public or private.

(d) Witnesses, counsel, and experts. Claimants shall be permitted, but not required, to present witnesses, including expert witnesses. The Special Master or his designee shall be permitted to question witnesses and examine the credentials of experts. The claimant shall be entitled to be represented by an attorney in good standing, but it is not necessary that the claimant be represented by an attorney.

(e) Waivers. The Special Master shall have authority and discretion to require any waivers necessary to obtain more individualized information on specific claimants.

(f) Track A review of presumed award. For proceedings under Track A, the Special Master or his designee shall make a determination whether:

(1) There was an error in determining the presumptive award, either because the claimant's individual criteria were misapplied or for another reason; or

(2) The claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award.

(g) Determination. The Special Master shall notify the claimant in writing of the final amount of the award, but need not create or provide any written record of the deliberations that resulted in that determination. There shall be no further review or appeal of the Special Master's determination.

§ 104.34 Publication of awards.

In order to assist potential claimants in evaluating their options of either filing a claim with the Special Master or filing a lawsuit in tort, the Special Master reserves the right to publicize the amounts of some or all of the awards, but shall not publish the name of the claimants or victims that received each award. If published, these decisions would be intended by the Special Master as general guides for potential claimants and should not be viewed as precedent binding on the Special Master or his staff.

§ 104.35 Claims deemed abandoned by claimants.

The Special Master and his staff will endeavor to evaluate promptly any information submitted by claimants. Nonetheless, it is the responsibility of the claimant to keep the Special Master informed of his or her current address and to respond within the duration of this two-year program to requests for additional information. Claims outstanding at the end of this program because of a claimant's failure to complete his or her filings shall be deemed abandoned.

Subpart D - Amount of Compensation for Eligible Claimants.

§ 104.41. Amount of compensation.

As provided in section 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) of the Act, in determining the amount of compensation to which a claimant is entitled, the Special Master shall take into consideration the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant. The individual circumstances of the claimant may include the financial needs or financial resources of the claimant or the victim's dependents and beneficiaries. As provided in section 405(b)(6) of the Act, the Special Master shall reduce the amount of compensation by the amount of collateral source compensation the claimant (or, in the case of a Personal Representative, the victim's beneficiaries) has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001. In no event shall an award (before collateral source compensation has been deducted) be less than $500,000 in any case brought on behalf of a deceased victim with a spouse or dependent, or $300,000 in any case brought on behalf of a deceased victim who was single with no dependents.

§ 104.42. Applicable state law.

The phrase "to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable state law," as used in the statute's definition of economic loss in section 402(5) of the Act, is interpreted to mean that the Special Master is not permitted to compensate claimants for those categories or types of economic losses that would not be compensable under the law of the state that would be applicable to any tort claims brought by or on behalf of the victim.

§ 104.43 Determination of presumed economic loss for decedents.

In reaching presumed determinations for economic loss for Personal Representatives bringing claims on behalf of decedents, the Special Master shall consider sums corresponding to the following:

- (a) Loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment. The Special Master, as part of the process of reaching a "determination" pursuant to section 405(b) of the Act, shall develop a methodology and publish schedules, tables, or charts that will permit prospective claimants to estimate determinations of loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment based upon individual circumstances of the deceased victim, including: the age of the decedent as of September 11, 2001; the number of dependents who survive the decedent; whether the decedent is survived by a spouse; and the amount and nature of the decedent's income for recent years. The decedent's salary/income in 1998-2000 shall be evaluated in a manner that the Special Master deems appropriate. The Special Master may, if he deems appropriate, take an average of income figures for each of those three years. The Special Master's methodology and schedules, tables, or charts shall yield presumed determinations of loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment for annual incomes up to but not beyond the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States for the year 2000. In cases where the victim was a minor child, the Special Master may assume an average income for the child commensurate with the average income of all wage earners in the United States.

(b) Medical expense loss. This loss equals the out-of-pocket medical expenses that were incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that were not paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). This loss shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the Personal Representative.

(c) Replacement services loss. For decedents who did not have any prior earned income, or who worked only part time outside the home, economic loss may be determined with reference to replacement services and similar measures.

(d) Loss due to death/burial costs. This loss shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the personal representative and includes the out-of-pocket burial costs that were incurred.

(e) Loss of business or employment opportunities. Such losses shall be addressed through the procedure outlined above in paragraph (a) of this section.

§ 104.44 Determination of presumed noneconomic losses for decedents.

The presumed noneconomic losses for decedents shall be $250,000 plus an additional $50,000 for the spouse and each dependent of the deceased victim. Such presumed losses include a noneconomic component of replacement services loss.

§ 104.45 Determination of presumed economic loss for claimants who suffered physical harm.

In reaching presumed determinations for economic loss for claimants who suffered physical harm (but did not die), the Special Master shall consider sums corresponding to the following:

(a) Loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment. The Special Master may determine the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the claimant, regarding the actual amount of work that the claimant has missed or will miss without compensation. Alternatively, the Special Master may determine the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment by relying upon the methodology created pursuant to § 104.43(a) and adjusting the loss based upon the extent of the victim's physical harm.

(1) Disability; in general. In evaluating claims of disability, the Special Master will, in general, make a determination regarding whether the claimant is capable of performing his or her usual profession in light of the injuries.

(2) Total permanent disability. With respect to claims of total permanent disability, the Special Master may accept a determination of disability made by the Social Security Administration as evidence of disability without any further medical evidence or review. The Special Master may also consider determinations of permanent total disability made by other governmental agencies or private insurers in evaluating the claim. The Special Master may require that the claimant submit an evaluation of the claimant's disability and ability to perform his or her occupation prepared by medical experts.

(3) Partial disability. With respect to claims of partial disability, the Special Master may consider evidence of the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to perform his or her usual occupation as well as the effect of the partial disability on the claimant's ability to participate in usual daily activities.

(b) Medical Expense Loss. This loss equals the out-of-pocket medical expenses that were incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that were not paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). In addition, this loss equals future out-of-pocket medical expenses that will be incurred as a result of the physical harm suffered by the victim (i.e., those medical expenses that will not be paid for or reimbursed through health insurance). These losses shall be calculated on a case-by-case basis, using documentation and other information submitted by the claimant.

(c) Replacement services loss. For injured claimants who did not have any prior earned income, or who worked only part-time outside the home, economic loss may be determined with reference to replacement services and similar measures.

(d) Loss of business or employment opportunities. Such losses shall be addressed through the procedure outlined above in paragraph (a) of this section.

§ 104.46 Determination of presumed noneconomic losses for claimants who suffered physical harm.

The Special Master may determine the presumed noneconomic losses for claimants who suffered physical harm (but did not die) by relying upon the noneconomic losses described in § 104.44 and adjusting the losses based upon the extent of the victim's physical harm. Such presumed losses include any noneconomic component of replacement services loss.

We were required, of course, to adhere to the language which Congress set out in the statute, including the provisions requiring that awards be offset by all collateral source compensation such as benefits from life insurance and other government programs. However, we did find ambiguity in the statute as to gifts provided to victims and their families by private charities. These regulations do not require that awards be offset by such private charitable assistance.

We have concluded that the purpose of the Act is not simply to examine economic and noneconomic harm, but also to provide compensation that is just and appropriate in light of claimants' individual circumstances. We have concluded that any methodology that does nothing more than attempt to replicate a theoretically possible future income stream would lead to awards that would be insufficient relative to the needs of some victims' families, and excessive relative to the needs of others. The statute specifies that individual circumstances beyond economic and noneconomic harm should be taken into account. It is our view that, absent extraordinary circumstances, awards in excess of $3 million, tax-free, will rarely be appropriate in light of individual needs and resources. At the same time, we want to ensure that victims' families are receiving at least a minimum level of resources to help meet their needs and rebuild their lives. Thus, we have concluded that the families of deceased victims should receive a combined total of at least $500,000 from this program, other state and federal programs, life insurance policies and other sources of compensation. Similarly, the baseline for single decedents should be $300,000. This ensures that every needy claimant's total compensation from this program and other sources will be at least equal to these threshold amounts.

In sum, the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 is an attempt by the American people to demonstrate their solidarity with, and generosity for, those injured by the terrible September 11 attack on our country. It provides an alternative compensation scheme to the traditional tort system, a method of providing substantial and quick compensation to those who elect to participate.

(a) Payments that constitute collateral source compensation. The amount of compensation shall be reduced by all collateral source compensation, including life insurance, pension funds, death benefit programs, and payments by federal, state, or local governments related to the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001.

(b) Payments that do not constitute collateral source compensation. The following payments received by claimants do not constitute collateral source compensation:

(1) The value of services or in-kind charitable gifts such as provision of emergency housing, food, or clothing; and

(2) Charitable donations distributed to the beneficiaries of the decedent, to the injured claimant, or to the beneficiaries of the injured claimant by private charitable entities; provided, however, that the Special Master may determine that funds provided to victims or their families through a private charitable entity constitute, in substance, a payment described in paragraph (a) of this section.

Subpart E - Payment of Claims

§ 104.51 Payments to eligible individuals.

Not later than 20 days after the date on which a determination is made by the Special Master regarding the amount of compensation due a claimant under the Fund, the Special Master shall authorize payment to such claimant of the amount determined with respect to the claimant.

§ 104.52 Distribution of award to decedent's beneficiaries.

The Personal Representative shall distribute the award in a manner consistent with the law of the decedent's domicile or any applicable rulings made by a court of competent jurisdiction. The Personal Representative shall, before payment is authorized, provide to the Special Master a plan for distribution of any award received from the Fund. Notwithstanding any other provision of these regulations or any other provision of state law, in the event that the Special Master concludes that the Personal Representative's plan for distribution does not appropriately compensate the victim's spouse, children, or other relatives, the Special Master may direct the Personal Representative to distribute all or part of the award to such spouse, children, or other relatives.

Subpart F - Limitations

§ 104.61 Limitation on civil actions.

(a) General. Section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act provides that upon the submission of a claim under the Fund, the claimant waives the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any federal or state court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except that this limitation does not apply to civil actions to recover collateral source obligations. The Special Master shall take appropriate steps to inform potential claimants of section 405(c)(3)(B) of the Act.

(b) Pending actions. Claimants who have filed a civil action or who are a party to such an action as described in paragraph (a) of this section may not file a claim with the Special Master unless they withdraw from such action not later than [PLEASE INSERT DATE WHICH IS 90 DAYS AFTER THE DATE OF PUBLICATION IN THE FEDERAL REGISTER].

§ 104.62 Time limit on filing claims.

§ 104.63 Subrogation.

Compensation under this Fund does not constitute the recovery of tort damages against a third party nor the settlement of a third party action, and the United States shall be subrogated to all potential claims against third party tortfeasors of any victim receiving compensation from the Fund. For that reason, no person or entity having paid other benefits or compensation to or on behalf of a victim shall have any right of recovery, whether through subrogation or otherwise, against the compensation paid by the Fund.

Subpart G - Measures to Protect the Integrity of the Compensation Program

§ 104.71 Procedures to prevent and detect fraud.

(a) Review of claims. For the purpose of detecting and preventing the payment of fraudulent claims and for the purpose of assuring accurate and appropriate payments to eligible claimants, the Special Master shall implement procedures to:

- (1) Verify, authenticate, and audit claims;
- (2) Analyze claim submissions to detect inconsistencies, irregularities, duplication, and multiple claimants; and
- (3) Ensure the quality control of claims review procedures.

(b) Quality control. The Special Master shall institute periodic quality control audits designed to evaluate the accuracy of submissions and the accuracy of payments, subject to the oversight of the Inspector General of the Department of Justice.

(c) False or fraudulent claims. The Special Master shall refer all evidence of false or fraudulent claims to appropriate law enforcement authorities.

APPENDIX TO PREAMBLE
SUMMARY OF PUBLIC COMMENTS SUBMITTED IN RESPONSE TO THE
NOVEMBER 5, 2001 NOTICE OF INQUIRY AND ADVANCE NOTICE OF RULEMAKING.

The following is a summary of the comments the Department of Justice ("the Department") received in response to its Notice of Inquiry published on November 5, 2001. The Notice of Inquiry sought input on numerous issues regarding potential regulations for the "September 11 Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund"), which was signed into law as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act")(the "Act").

Over 800 comments were received by the November 26, 2001 deadline established by the Department. Additionally, hundreds of comments have been received since that date. Every comment was – and continues to be – reviewed, considered, and catalogued into one or more of 72 different topics. While the following summary does not address every issue raised by commenters, it provides a general synopsis of the most often raised issues. The summary is not intended to be an exhaustive illustration of every issue contemplated by the Special Master or the Department. Indeed, as mentioned above, all comments were considered in the promulgation of these interim final rules. Finally, the summarized issues below are not arranged in any particular order of importance or level of volume.

The Effective Date of This Interim Final Rule

While the Act specified that this rule should be issued by December 21, 2001, it did not specify when they should become effective. Accordingly, the Department sought comment on this issue. The Department noted that the Administrative Procedure Act generally provides that rules not go into effect for at least 30 days absent "good cause."

Many commenters favored an immediate effective date so that claims could be filed right away. Many indicated an immediate need for relief and expressed frustration about their experiences with obtaining short-term assistance from other sources. However, some commenters thought an immediate effective date would be difficult to implement because the Special Master would need time to hire personnel and to set up the operation of the program before beginning to process claims.

A number of commenters suggested a compromise – making available some amount of short-term relief on an immediate basis to eligible claimants, and then commencing the more detailed review process necessary to provide a final award. Some suggested using flat amounts for these immediate awards, while another commenter suggested establishing an interest-free line of credit upon which families could draw. Another suggestion was that claims for immediate assistance be prioritized by "need."

Eligibility

In its November 5, 2001, Notice of Inquiry, the Department noted that section 405(b) of the statute requires the Special Master to determine whether a claimant is an "eligible individual" under section 405(c). "Eligibility," in turn, is defined by the Act to include: (1) individuals (other than the terrorists) aboard American Airlines flights 11 and 77 and United Airlines flights 93 and 175; or (2) individuals who were "present at" the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, or the site of the aircraft crash at Shanksville, Pennsylvania at the time or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes; or (3) personal representatives of deceased individuals who would otherwise be eligible. Moreover, to be eligible for an award, an individual must have suffered physical harm or death as a result of one of the terrorist-related air crashes. The Department sought comment on whether a Departmental regulation or a statement of policy by the Special Master would be appropriate to clarify these criteria, and if so, what those criteria should be.

The Department specifically invited comment on the following questions related to eligibility:

- How should "present at" be interpreted?
- Should the term "physical harm" be limited to serious injuries, as it is under some other no-fault compensation schemes, (see, e.g., N.Y. Ins. Law § 5102), or should it be construed more broadly?
- Should "physical harm" be limited to currently identifiable injuries?
- Can and should the program address latent, but not yet evident, harm?
- What duration of time is intended by the statutory phrase "immediate aftermath"?

(1) "Present At" And "Immediate Aftermath"

Many of the comments addressed the question of how to define the terms "present at the site" and "immediate aftermath," especially for purposes of those who were in New York at the time of the crashes. Some commenters urged a broad definition of these terms. They recommended that anybody in New York City be considered "present" because the debris and ash from the collapse of the World Trade Towers was widespread. Residents who live near the Ground Zero site in New York urged that they be eligible to recover under the Fund.

In contrast, other commenters argued for a narrower definition of the terms, asserting that the legislation intended to constrain the Fund to the locus of the buildings themselves, and to some very limited time period after the crashes. One comment recommended that "immediate aftermath" be defined as 48 hours after the crashes.

(2) Physical Harm

With respect to the nature of harm involved, some commenters asserted there should be no lower boundary for "nonserious" injuries. Of those who commented on the point, there were disagreements as to whether post-traumatic stress could be considered physical harm for purposes of filing a claim under the Fund. Certain commenters indicated that many people suffered substantial stress from witnessing the attacks and devastation and that they should be eligible to recover from the Fund. However, others argued that the Fund was not intended to cover psychological injury because the language of the statute specifically requires that the claimant suffer "physical harm." These commenters feared that recovery for stress-related injuries would open a Pandora's Box of less serious claims, which, in turn, may reduce the amount of compensation issued to those with the most serious physical injuries.

(3) Latent Harm

Some of the comments focused on the problem of latent injuries and diseases. Several commenters mentioned the coughing they have experienced as a result of exposure to the crash site in New York, and some nearby residents expressed concern about latent harm that might accrue from returning to their homes before the conclusion of the rescue and cleanup efforts. On the other hand, other commenters expressed concern about covering any harms that do not manifest themselves within the two-year lifetime of the Fund. They argued the Fund was not designed to compensate for latent harm primarily because the Fund only exists for two years, and many injuries may not become manifest until after that time.

(4) Eligibility of Victims And Survivors

Some commenters addressed the meaning of the word "victim." For example, some commenters urged that any unborn child who died should be considered eligible for an award as a victim. With respect to a different group of potential claimants, some commenters argued that illegal aliens should not be eligible for awards. However, other commenters did not think that legal status should preclude an award from the Fund.

With regard to claims on behalf of decedent victims, the comments evidenced a tremendous amount of confusion about whether the statute intended to cover only the losses incurred by the victim or the losses incurred by relatives and others. Some commenters noted that section 405 of the Act provides that only claims on behalf of the victim can be filed with the Fund, presumably leaving to the courts any claims by family members or partners on their own behalf. However, some commenters noted that section 403 of the Act states that its purpose is to provide compensation to any individual "or relatives of a deceased individual" who were killed as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes. The commenters further noted that various types of losses that may be compensated by the Fund pursuant to section 402 are akin to those that in civil actions are normally considered losses to survivors rather than to the victim.

Many commenters commented on the "eligibility" of particular "survivors" of the victim. Some suggested that only a spouse and children be considered "eligible." Others expressed concern as to whether parents, divorced spouses, children of a prior marriage, and others with a legal relationship would be "eligible" for an award under the Fund. In this regard, a number of comments specifically urged that non-married partners and others with a non-traditional relationship be considered "eligible" for an award. Some commenters opposed the idea of extending eligibility under the Fund to those in non-traditional relationships and argued for a narrower definition of eligibility.

Similarly, there were a number of comments about how "eligible" survivors would participate in the decision of whether to submit an application to the Fund, since in their view the application to the Fund would prohibit all of them from filing civil litigation. Some commenters explicitly suggested the law be interpreted to allow claims both on behalf of the decedent's estate and on behalf of any survivors, and suggested that such claims could be consolidated for decision before the Special Master. Others, however, specifically recommended that claims be limited to those on behalf of the estate. Many commenters, presuming that to be the case, recommended that the state courts be responsible for designating the representative to represent the estate, and that any award be distributed in accordance with the requirements of the will or state intestacy law.

Assistance To Claimants

In its Notice of Inquiry of November 5, 2001, the Department noted that it would appear that these requirements -- combined with the statutory time frame for the Special Master to reach a decision once a claim is filed -- contemplate a detailed form and filing. Accordingly, the Department invited comments on whether there are actions the Special Master should be required to take before he can accept a claim, or deem a claim "filed." The Department noted that the statute appeared to provide a very limited time frame for the Special Master to evaluate a claim before making a decision -- 120 days from the date a claim is filed. Accordingly, the Department sought comment on whether the Special Master should be permitted to dismiss a claim as not properly filed for lack of adequate supporting information and, if so, whether an individual should thereafter be permitted to refile the claim. Comments were also solicited on whether it would be advisable to include in the rules a procedure where the time for making a determination could be extended by agreement.

The Department also requested comment on the design and content of the claim forms in light of the statutory requirements, as well as on making the forms and their instructions readable and readily available. The Department also sought comment on how it should implement the statutory requirement that claimants be provided with assistance.

While most of those who commented supported maintaining firm deadlines, many commenters suggested that a claimant be able to "halt the clock" at the claimant's discretion for various purposes (e.g., to provide further evidence before the claim is evaluated, to allow more time to prepare for a hearing, or to allow for an administrative review of an initial award determination). Some suggested that the Special Master also have the authority not to start the clock until the claim contained sufficient information upon which an award determination could be made, or to halt the process for a set period of time to allow for review of an initial determination (provided that the claimant concurred with that decision).

A number of commenters stressed that a claimant should not lose the right to proceed with their claim due to an incomplete file. One commenter suggested the Special Master should have 14 days to review a claim before deciding if there is enough information to proceed. Several commenters suggested that claimants not be required to waive their right to litigation until it was determined the claimant was eligible to recover from the Fund. Similarly, some commenters stated they would have difficulty deciding whether or not to opt into the fund (and thus waive their right to sue) if they did not have some idea or presumption of the range of recovery they might expect from the Fund.

Many commenters urged the Department to establish a simplified procedure for initiating a claim with the Fund. They expressed frustration with the barrage of paperwork required to apply for assistance with other organizations. Some employers offered to provide information on behalf of their employees or survivors in an effort to reduce the paperwork burden on claimants. On the other hand, some noted that -- in light of the pro bono legal assistance that has been offered to the survivors -- claimants would have the option to have the assistance of an attorney to complete the forms. A number of commenters suggested a two-step claims process that would involve a simple initial submission, followed by a more asserted effort to collect additional information with the guidance of claimant assistance personnel from the Office of the Special Master.

A number of commenters had suggestions as to how the Special Master might assist claimants both in filing claims and completing the claims process. Many suggested that local offices be established in New York City, Washington D.C., Pennsylvania, and other cities that served as the domicile of victims. Some urged that outreach efforts be made to locate potential claimants and make them aware of the program's operations. Some mentioned that outreach should include multi-lingual assistance and publications. One group suggested that each Hearing Office have an Applicant's Assistant. Others suggested the Special Master hire victim advocates to assist claimants throughout the process.

The Claims Evaluation Process

The Department solicited comment on whether every claimant should be granted an oral hearing or whether paper hearings may be sufficient, and what types of oral hearing might be practicable in light of the statutory time frames.

Further, the Department sought comment on how evidence might be established and whether it is authorized to enforce requests made by the hearing officer to third parties for evidence that is necessary to a proceeding (e.g., evidence that might bear on whether all aspects of the claim file on which the decision will be based are accurate and complete). The Department sought comment on whether such proceedings should be recorded, whether such proceedings should be held in a location convenient to the claimant, how to deal with scheduling conflicts, and whether the opportunity for a hearing can be waived by a claimant through inaction or unwarranted delay.

Many commenters had opposing views on the role hearings should play in claims evaluation. Some commenters -- comparing this program to civil litigation -- viewed the hearings as essential to each and every claim. These commenters recommended hearings as a sort of "mini-trial," which would include rules of evidence (albeit relaxed rules) and adversarial questioning of witnesses. Using the same analogy, however, these commenters suggested that many claims could be "settled" based on only the paper submissions. Other comments suggested the hearings be more akin to an opportunity -- for those claimants who want to exercise it -- to make an informal oral presentation of their cases. They viewed the hearing as an opportunity to ensure that the decision maker was aware of their individual circumstances. Many of these commenters also suggested, for various reasons, that not all claimants would want a hearing. Some commenters suggested allowing claimants, upon filing a claim, to elect among different "tracks" -- one that would involve a hearing, and one that would not.

On the question of who should be hired as hearing officers, suggestions included retired trust executives, retired judges, attorneys experienced in handling high volume caseloads, and those experienced in civil litigation. Some commenters recommended there be a panel of hearing officers rather than one hearing officer. A number of commenters also recommended that claimants have the opportunity for review of their award to ensure that the decision maker was aware of their individual circumstances.

Many commenters submitted detailed procedural suggestions for the claims process. Among other things, these suggestions dealt with how eligibility and damages could be established through the use of affidavits under penalty of perjury in the event relevant documents had been lost as a result of the crashes themselves (e.g., designations of beneficiaries maintained by employers). Additionally, a number of commenters suggested the Special Master have the right to subpoena evidence required to make a determination.

(1) Meeting the 120-day Deadline

The Department invited comment on what means and mechanisms could be implemented to allow just compensation within the statutorily-mandated 120-day period for processing claims. In particular, the Department sought input on whether and how statistical methodologies should be developed and used as a starting point for decision, and whether publication of hypothetical or presumptive awards for classes of individuals would assist potential claimants in determining whether to opt into the Fund. For the most part, these comments were encapsulated in discussions regarding the calculation of damages; namely, economic and noneconomic losses.

(2) Calculating "Economic Losses"

The Department sought specific comment on how the Special Master should determine "economic losses." Although retaining experts is certainly not prohibited, the Special Master will not require any claimant to obtain legal counsel or other experts to assist in proving or presenting evidence of damages. The Special Master may, however, draw on available information from appropriate specialists in relevant fields to analyze economic losses. The Department invited comment regarding the necessary qualifications for such specialists, the data that should be utilized, the methodologies that should be employed, the documentation that should be required for every claimant, and how state law should bear upon such determinations. In addition, the Department invited comments on how to address the economic losses of individuals whose lost future income streams would have been highly contingent, variable, or unpredictable.

As expected, the range of comments on how best to calculate economic losses was widely varied. One group suggested a minimum value be calculated based on median income and remaining years of work, with flexibility to adjust the award after hearing all the evidence in individual cases. Similarly, certain comments suggested the use of a grid would be appropriate in certain circumstances to identify presumed awards. Others urged that no type of grid be used.

In terms of presumptive valuation, a few commenters recommended that awards mirror the amount a party could anticipate receiving from personal injury or wrongful death actions. Others disagreed. Many recognized the limited opportunities now available to potential plaintiffs filing claims in civil courts arising out of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. At least one commenter argued that the fairest approach in determining economic losses is that which insurance companies use in settling claims.

Some commenters indicated that economic awards should not be based on differences in individual income prior to the crash. Some suggested using a flat dollar figure per surviving family member (e.g., $250,000 for each survivor). Another suggested a flat amount for death at $100,000, injury at $50,000, and various other losses at slated dollar figures. On the other hand, some commenters felt the purpose of the program is to act as a substitute for civil damage actions, and that efforts should be made to determine and take into consideration the amount of income likely lost by a decedent. A large number of comments were received with respect to how to establish such income (e.g., average over a certain number of prior years, plus information supplied by employers on future prospects).

(3) Calculating "Noneconomic Losses"

The Department also sought comment as to "noneconomic losses." Most notably, the Department invited comments regarding whether, and in what manner, the Special Master can or should draw meaningful distinctions between both those victims who died in different locations and those who suffered similar injuries. The Department also invited comments on whether the Department should (as some have suggested) issue regulations determining the amount of noneconomic loss for classes of similarly situated individuals or whether, instead, the Special Master should determine all noneconomic loss on a detailed claim-by-claim basis. Further, the Department requested comment on what facts and circumstances should be considered in determining noneconomic losses for each individual, and what standards should be employed.

Comments regarding noneconomic losses were similarly varied. One commenting association suggested noneconomic losses -- such as pain and suffering -- should be standardized because such losses do not vary by income strata. Numerous commenters advocated a "fixed" noneconomic award, stating that the government should not attempt to draw distinctions in the amount of pain suffered by victims or their survivors. One commenter suggested the most equitable process for determining noneconomic awards would be an elective process. Under this proposed method, a claimant could elect to have the award calculated by use of a matrix, or alternatively, could present evidence at a hearing to establish the amount to which the claimant

Neither this Fund nor any monetary compensation can possibly provide a full measure of relief to those who have suffered as a result of September 11. But the Fund will provide appropriate compensation and some measure of comfort to those whose lives have been torn asunder by the events of September 11.

Background.

The following discussion provides background information and explanation of the regulations promulgated herein. Section A describes the statutory backdrop for the regulations; Section B discusses the Department's rulemaking procedures to date; Section C addresses Eligibility; Section D pertains to Advance Benefits; Section E discusses Final Awards made by the Fund; Section F describes the Special Master's claims evaluation process; and Section G relates to Assistance to Claimants. The text of the regulations is set forth following these explanatory sections. A catalog of public commentary is set forth thereafter as an Appendix. More detailed information regarding the program, including a flow chart of applicable procedures and a table of estimated or "presumed" awards, will be available on the Victims Compensation Fund website at www.usdoj.gov/victimcompensation.

A. The Statute.

The President signed the "September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001" (the "Fund") into law on September 22, 2001, as Title IV of Public Law 107-42 ("Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act") ("the Act"). The purpose of this Fund is to provide compensation to eligible individuals who were physically injured as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, and compensation through a "personal representative" for those who died as a result of the crashes. Generally, eligibility is limited to: (1) individuals on the planes at the time of the crashes (other than the terrorists); and (2) individuals present at the World Trade Center, the Pentagon or the site of the crash in Pennsylvania at the time of the crashes or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes.

The Fund is designed to provide a no-fault alternative to tort litigation for individuals who were physically injured or killed as a result of the aircraft hijackings and crashes on September 11, 2001. Others who may have suffered losses as a result of those events (e.g., those without identifiable physical injuries but who lost employment) are not included in this special program. Indeed, compensation will be provided only for losses caused on account of personal physical injuries or death, even though the victims may have suffered other losses, such as property loss. For this reason, the Department and the Special Master anticipate that all awards believes he or she is entitled. A number of commenters argued that the statute necessitated an entirely individualized determination of noneconomic losses in every case. A group representing survivors of decedents suggested that noneconomic losses must be uncapped and based, in part, on the number and age of any surviving children or dependents, the current and future pain and suffering experienced by the victim's family, and the severity of pain suffered by the victim himself or herself.

(4) Taxation

A number of commenters raised questions about the taxability of various kinds of awards issued under the Fund. Several commenters asserted that compensation from the Fund should be nontaxable under federal law, similar to various types of tort awards. Another commenter stated that state victim compensation fund awards generally are not taxable, either by the state or the federal government. On the other hand, another commenter stated he did not see the purpose of distributing taxpayers' money to victims, and urged taxing the awards so as to return some of the money to the Treasury.

Collateral Sources

The Department sought comments on the issue of collateral sources. Although the Act requires that collateral sources be deducted from awards issued under the Fund (and explicitly outlines examples of certain types of collateral sources), the Department invited comment as to how the term "collateral source" should be defined.

(1) General Comments

Despite the explicit language in the Act, a number of commenters took issue with deducting any collateral sources whatsoever. Although many recognized that both the Department and the Special Master are bound to follow the language in the Act, they nonetheless argued that collateral sources are -- in many states -- not offset in wrongful death suits. Some urged that the type of collateral source offsets should be interpreted narrowly. A number of commenters also suggested that if collateral source benefits to a victim are to be offset, a counter-offset should be made for the premiums or contributions made by the victim to purchase various benefits. Others specifically suggested that only the value of collateral benefits funded by a victim's employer should be offset.

Many commenters, however, asserted that the program should not "unjustly enrich" the victims or their survivors, and supported the use of widespread offsets. Some of these comments mentioned that -- although the statute does not provide either a ceiling or floor for the amount of awards -- the Fund may have only a limited pool of resources to distribute to claimants (akin to the funds being collected and distributed by charitable organizations), and suggested the need to help those most in need. Other comments noted that unjust enrichment should not flow through tax-payer dollars. It was mentioned that many taxpayers -- who ultimately will provide the funds under the program -- also sent in charitable contributions not to unjustly enrich victims or their families, but, rather, solely to help them through these troubled times.

(2) "A claimant has received or is entitled to receive"

Some commenters specifically focused on the word "claimant" in the phrase "a claimant has received or is entitled to receive," and urged that any collateral source benefits not paid or to be paid directly to the claimant not be deducted from the award. These comments were often parallel to those concerning the question of whose losses are to be compensated under the Fund:

only those of the decedent (estate), or those of others as well. (See the discussion of Eligibility.)

A number of comments also focused on the words "entitled to receive." Some recommended that only those collateral benefits scheduled to be paid as a result of contractual or other clear obligations should be deducted from an award. Others recommended that only the present value of any future contingent awards be considered in making any offset.

(3) Life Insurance

Many commenters were frustrated that the Act requires life insurance proceeds to be deducted from awards. Many asserted that deducting life insurance will penalize those who planned ahead. One suggested that life insurance should only be offset if payable to a dependent of the victim, and another group of commenters indicated that only the sums received by the eligible applicant net of all taxes that exceed the premiums -- or other payments made by the applicant -- be deducted. A number suggested that if life insurance is to be offset, the premiums paid should be returned to the victim by reducing the amount of the benefit offset.

(4) Pensions

While similar concerns (as to life insurance) were raised in connection with pensions, a more common comment concerned the meaning of the term "pension." For example, some commenters noted that pensions are not normally considered to be "compensation for a loss" but are instead akin to savings.

(5) Workers Compensation And Victim Assistance Programs

One commenter pointed out that most of the victims may be eligible for workers' compensation benefits because they were killed while on the job. Further, with respect to those receiving benefits under New York law, the compensation insurer can terminate workers' compensation payments -- absent claimants obtaining consent to enter the Fund -- if benefits are being paid to the injured workers or survivors. New York State legal authorities confirmed the noteworthiness of this issue, and recommended that workers' compensation payments not be considered a collateral source to this extent.

With respect to state victim assistance funds, one commenter noted that 42 U.S.C. § 10602(e) -- which generally provides that state crime victim boards may refuse to pay out benefits if another Federal program is paying benefits -- was explicitly amended to exclude payments made under the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001. The commenter suggested that some programs covered under that code provision -- that have already made payments -- may be entitled to reimbursement as a result.

(6) Charitable Contributions

Many victims of the terrorist-related crashes on September 11, 2001, have or may receive support from special funds set up to assist them, as well as from special programs established by some of their employers to share future profits and the like. Accordingly, whether to reduce Fund awards by the amount of such contributions was one of the issues given the most attention in the comments. Notably, this issue was discussed in a number of news articles at about the time the Notice of Inquiry was issued.

Commenters were heavily divided on this issue. Many were strongly opposed to reducing awards by the amount of charity funding received. This includes some commenters who donated to charities established for this purpose, as well as employers who established funds to help the families of the victims. Many insisted that funds collected by employers solely for the purpose of compensating victims of the September 11 attacks should not be deemed a collateral source. Many drew a distinction between funds provided for short-term assistance and need, and those designed to compensate victims for their losses.

On the other hand, a number of comments from those who contributed money to various charities viewed the purposes of the charities and the Fund as one and the same; namely, compensating the victims. These commenters asserted they had not intended making contributions to unjustly enrich the families, and would hesitate to make such contributions in the future if their help turns out only to ensure persons maintain a certain lifestyle.

A number of commenters also pointed to the practical difficulties of trying to establish what claimants may have received from charities. Some suggested the Fund should have access to any database of charitable contributions, including one that was reported to be under consideration in New York.

After discussing these factors, some commenters suggested that the Special Master only offset charitable contributions over a certain amount. A few commenters suggested only offsetting charities set up for longer term assistance to the victims (e.g., tuition funds or scholarships for the children of all the victims).

Payment of Awards

Some commenters expressed the view that payments by the fund should be in the form of "structured settlements" or annuities rather than in lump sum. One commenter suggested payments to children should go to a trustee for the benefit of the child. However, other commenters argued for lump sum payments and objected to the government placing any restrictions on the claimants' award.

Limitations on Fees for Assistance And Payment by the Special Master

The Department requested comments on whether the Special Master has the authority to limit the types and amounts of fees that can be charged by counsel, accountants, experts or others who are retained by claimants to assist them to file and pursue compensation claims, and whether such fees can and should be paid by the Special Master directly out of compensation awards. The Department also solicited comments on what limitations, if any, the rules should impose on non-attorney, non-claimant representatives' participation in filing claims.

A number of commenters noted that the right to be represented by counsel is provided by the statute, that not all claimants would be comfortable using pro-bono counsel to represent their interests, and that payment of attorneys' fees is necessary to ensure representation by counsel of choice. Some of these commenters suggested, however, that fees could be limited so as not to exceed 10% of the award to claimant. Paradoxically, some commenters opposed using any amount of money from the Fund to pay legal fees.

from the Fund will be free of federal taxation. See I.R.C. § 104(a)(2) (stating that damages received "on account of personal physical injuries or physical sickness" are excludable from gross income for purposes of federal income taxation).

A claimant who files for compensation waives any right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any federal or state court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes of September 11, 2001, except for actions to recover collateral source obligations.

Determinations on eligibility and the amount of compensation are to be made by the Special Master. After determining whether an individual is an eligible claimant under the Act, the Special Master is to determine the amount of compensation to be awarded based upon the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant.

The law also provides that the Special Master is to make a final determination on any claim within 120 days from when the claim was filed and, if an award is made, to authorize payment within 20 days thereafter. The determinations of the Special Master are final and are not reviewable by any court. Claims with the Fund must be filed on or before two years after the effective date of these regulations, i.e. [insert date 2 years from date of this publication in the FEDERAL REGISTER]. Payments from the Fund are made by the United States Government, which in turn obtains the right of subrogation to each award.

Pursuant to the Act, regulations addressing certain administrative matters must be issued within 90 days of enactment. Section 407 of the Act provides that the Department, in consultation with the Special Master, promulgate regulations on four matters by December 21, 2001:

- (1) Forms to be used in submitting claims;
- (2) The information to be included in such forms;
- (3) Procedures for hearing and the presentation of evidence; and
- (4) Procedures to assist an individual in filing and pursuing claims under this title.

In addition, section 407 authorizes, but does not require, the Department to issue additional rules to implement the program. This Interim Final Rule addresses issues beyond the four specifically required by the Act in order to create a program that will be efficient, will treat similarly situated claimants alike, and will allow potential claimants to make informed decisions regarding whether to file claims with the Fund. Nonetheless, the Department recognizes that it cannot anticipate all of the issues that will arise over the course of the program and that there will inevitably be many difficult issues that the Special Master will have to resolve in the course of making determinations on individual claims.

B. Rulemaking history to date.

On November 5, 2001, the Department requested public input on a number of issues. 66 FR 55901. The Department noted that, at that time, the Special Master had not yet been appointed, but that it wanted as much public comment as feasible before issuing the regulations by December 21, 2001. On November 26, 2001, the Attorney General appointed Kenneth R. Feinberg as Special Master. As called for by the Act, this interim final rule is promulgated in consultation with the Special Master.

The Department received more than 800 comments in response to the Department's Notice of Inquiry. Some were very brief and only spoke to a single issue; others responded to the Department's questions on a point by point basis. Still others contained detailed analyses, recommendations and even proposed regulatory language.

The range of commenters was very broad. Some commenters identified themselves as citizens, taxpayers or law professors, and many identified themselves as individuals who had contributed to charities for those impacted by the terrorist crashes. Many other commenters identified themselves as members of victims' families, partners or close friends, including some from organizations and groups of survivors. Several commenters identified themselves as employers who lost a significant number of employees in the crashes. A number of commenters identified themselves as residents of housing near "Ground Zero" in New York.

In addition, the Department received comments from many organizations including the American Insurance Association, the American Arbitration Association, the American Bar Association, Trial Lawyers Care, New York Trial Lawyers' Association, New York City Bar Association, Massachusetts Bar Association, National Center for Victims of Crime, National Association of Crime Victim Compensation Boards, the Oklahoma Crime Victim Compensation Board, Consumers Union, Public Citizen, the National Right To Life Committee, the Lambda Legal Defense & Education Fund, the American Civil Liberties Union, the Association of Flight Attendants, the Council on Foundations, the Nonprofit Coordinating Committee of New York, Independent Sector, the Alternative Dispute Resolution of the Federal Bar Association, the Alliance of Fiduciary Consultants, and the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission.

Individual members of Congress, groups of members, and members of the Senate leadership also provided comments. Further, joint comments were submitted on behalf of the New York City Mayor, the New York Governor, and the New York Attorney General, by members of the New York Assembly, and by the Attorney General of Connecticut.

Comments were also submitted by United Airlines and American Airlines, and from various individuals and companies who identified themselves as having expertise or experience in the administration of claims programs.

The Department has read every submission it received in response to this notice, from handwritten notes to scholarly discussions. The Department wants to express its appreciation for the time and careful thought reflected in those submissions.

While the Department has reviewed every submission it received, it will not regulate on every topic addressed in those comments. Over 70 separate topics were identified; almost two dozen full size notebooks are necessary to organize all of the comments by topic. All of the comments will be retained by the Department for subsequent consideration when it reviews comments on this interim final rule, and the comments will remain posted on the Department's web site where they may be reviewed by the public. The Department was pleased to see that some comments responded to others placed on the web site, and hopes this facility will continue to be of interest to the public.

It is not feasible to repeat here all of the suggestions received in the comments, let alone directly respond to each. The Appendix to this interim final rulemaking highlights some of the points raised by commenters in order to indicate the range of views received on how various issues should be approached.

C. Eligibility.

Section 405(b) of the Act requires the Special Master to determine whether a claimant is an "eligible individual" under section 405(c). "Eligibility," in turn, is defined by the Act to include: (1) individuals (other than the terrorists) aboard American Airlines flights 11 and 77 and United Airlines flights 93 and 175; (2) individuals who were "present at" the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, or the site of the aircraft crash at Shanksville, Pennsylvania at the time or in the immediate aftermath of the crashes; or (3) personal representatives of deceased individuals who would otherwise be eligible. Moreover, to be eligible for an award, an individual must have suffered physical harm or death as a result of one of the terrorist-related air crashes. This interim final rule addresses eligibility by defining the terms "present at the site," "immediate aftermath," "physical harm," and "personal representative."

"Present at the site": This rule defines the term "present at the site" (i.e. the World Trade Center, Pentagon, or Shanksville site) to mean physically present at the time of the crashes or immediate aftermath:

(1) In the buildings or portions of buildings that were destroyed as a result of the airplane crashes; or

(2) In any area contiguous to the crash sites that the Special Master determines was sufficiently close to the site that there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm resulting from the impact of the aircraft or any subsequent fire, explosions, or collapse of buildings (generally, the immediate area in which the impact occurred, fire occurred, portions of buildings fell, or debris fell upon and injured persons).

There are several reasons for this geographic limitation. First, this geographic limitation comports with the plain meaning of the statutory term "present at." Second, this geographic limitation is consistent with the further statutory requirement of physical injury or death, because the zone designated is that in which there was a demonstrable risk of physical harm from falling debris, explosions, or fire.

"Immediate aftermath": This rule defines the term "immediate aftermath" of the crashes to mean, for purposes of all claimants other than rescue workers, the period of time from the crashes until 12 hours after the crashes. This time frame appears to cover all of those who suffered physical injury or death, with the exception of rescue workers.

With respect to rescue workers who assisted in efforts to search for and recover victims, the regulations define "the immediate aftermath" to include the period from the crashes until 96 hours after the crashes. The regulations provide for this longer time period for rescue workers in recognition of their heroic efforts and their selfless reasons for being at the sites, and responds to a request by the Mayor of New York City that the program recognize the high level of danger and difficulty during the first four days of rescue operations.

"Physical harm": This rule defines the term "physical harm" to mean an objectively verifiable physical injury that was treated by a medical professional within 24 hours of the injury having been sustained or within 24 hours of rescue and either required hospitalization as an in-patient for at least 24 hours or caused, either temporarily or permanently, partial or total physical disability, incapacity, or disfigurement.

There are several reasons for this definition. The statutory term "physical harm" indicates that Congress did not intend for this Fund to compensate those who suffered only emotional harm or property damage. The statutory term "physical harm" also indicates that Congress did not intend for this Fund to cover those who face only a risk of future injury (i.e. latent harm that does not fully manifest itself within the statutory time period for this Fund). Indeed, because participation in this Fund precludes claimants from recovering through tort litigation, those with latent injuries that later became manifest would likely be undercompensated if they sought compensation now from the Fund before the injuries became manifest. Conversely, those who recovered for latent injuries that did not later become manifest could be overcompensated if they recovered from the Fund. While Congress might later consider whether an administrative program for latent harm caused by the September 11, 2001 terrorist-related aircraft crashes may be appropriate, the language of the statute that created this Fund does not contemplate awards for that purpose.

"Personal Representative": Section 405(c)(2)(C) provides that in the case of an individual who is deceased but who otherwise meets the other criteria for eligibility, a claim can be filed by the Personal Representative of the decedent. Section 405(c)(3)(A) provides that no more than one claim may be submitted by an individual or on behalf of a deceased individual.

In many or most cases, the identity of the "Personal Representative" will not be in dispute. Where there are disputes, two issues arise: (1) what are the rules for determining who is the Personal Representative?; and (2) who should apply the rules and resolve the dispute?

As to the first issue, the regulations rely on state law. Subject to certain contingencies, this rule defines the term "Personal Representative" to mean an individual appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction as the Personal Representative of the decedent or as the executor or administrator of the decedent's will or estate. In the event that no Personal Representative or executor or administrator has been appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction, and such issue is not the subject of pending litigation or other dispute, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative is the person named by the decedent in the decedent's will as the executor or administrator. In the event no will exists, the Special Master may, in his discretion, determine that the Personal Representative is the first person in the line of succession established by the laws of the state of the decedent's domicile governing intestacy.

Reliance on state law is necessary in part because those who file for recovery under the Fund waive their rights to recover through litigation, in which state law would determine the identity of the appropriate representatives of the decedent, or the decedent's estate, to bring suit. Thus, if the identity of Personal Representatives for purposes of this Fund were determined by federal regulation, there could be many situations in which the representative as defined by state law would choose litigation while the Personal Representative as defined by federal regulation would seek to recover from the Fund.

The second issue raises questions of program administration. Disputes between relatives, former spouses and other interested parties can be exceptionally fact-intensive and time-consuming. Indeed, state courts often spend considerable time and resources resolving such matters. The Special Master cannot accomplish his statutory duties if bogged down with these types of complex disputes. Nor would it be advisable for the Special Master to attempt to step in and supplant state court practice or the testamentary intent of decedents. Consequently, the rule provides that the Special Master has no obligation to arbitrate, litigate or otherwise resolve disputes as to the identity of the Personal Representative. Instead, to ensure that funds are not needlessly tied up due to disputes regarding the identity of the Personal Representative, the regulations provide that the disputing parties may agree in writing to the identity of a Personal Representative to act on their behalf, who may seek and accept payment from the Fund while those disputing parties work to settle their dispute. In appropriate cases, the Special Master may determine an award, but place the payment in escrow until the dispute regarding the Personal Representative is finally resolved.

Finally, the determination of the Personal Representative is not the same question as the determination of who ultimately will receive the award. In that regard, this rule provides that the Personal Representative shall distribute the award in a manner consistent with the law of the decedent's domicile or any applicable rulings made by a court of competent jurisdiction.

valuable insights into the way our government works.

Freedom and openness are at the core of our government. The president's order was crafted to provide as much information as possible to the public while also drawing on sound legal policy to respect the constitutional rights of former presidents.

For months skeptics have questioned President Bush's motives in establishing these sensible procedures. The order, they said, was an affront to open government and would put procedural roadblocks in the way of disclosure of important historical information. The critics were wrong.

Today, consistent with the president's order, the National Archives and Records Administration will publicly release thousands of pages of records belonging to former President Reagan. These documents represent all that have been forwarded to the administration thus far from the Reagan Library and this is only one of what will be many routine releases of records belonging to former presidents, including otherwise privileged records.

Today's action shows that that President Bush's executive order can and will work as intended to facilitate appropriate and expeditious public release of presidential records consistent with the Constitution and the act.

This is not to say that total disclosure will always happen. At times, certain documents may still be so sensitive that they must remain confidential. In some cases, release of documents could jeopardize our current national security, and while the pursuit of history is invaluable to our society, it should not jeopardize American lives. Nor should it deprive a president of candid advice while making crucial decisions.

Recognizing this, the Presidential Records Act, which provides for the release of documents 12 years after completion of the president's term, expressly provides that former presidents retain the right to assert available privileges over their presidential records after the 12-year period expires. While the executive order says nothing about whether and under what circumstances a privilege should be asserted, it does recognize the role former presidents play.

Some have been critical of the order's inclusion of former presidents in this process, but former presidents have the right to assert executive privilege based on both Supreme Court precedent and the Presidential Records Act itself. The act would be deemed unconstitutional if it did not allow them to assert available privileges.

Before the Act became law, former chief executives enjoyed complete control over their presidential records. But even without a legal requirement, former presidents have chosen to provide their papers for historical study.

President Bush expects that this tradition will continue. The value of presidential records and the principles of openness and access that their release represents are respected by him and are no doubt just as important to the former presidents whose papers will be subject to the Presidential Records Act.

There is no fair or logical basis for presuming that former presidents subject to the Act will exercise their constitutional and statutory authority to seek withholding of privileged records more aggressively than have earlier presidents. We are confident that, over time, the vast majority of presidential records including otherwise privileged records will be made available to the public.

The executive order states that absent compelling circumstances the current president will defer to the decision of the former president to authorize release of records. This provision largely removes a sitting president as a potential impediment to release of a former president's records. Give that over time former presidents have authorized release of the vast majority of their records, it is clear President Bush intended the order to facilitate the expeditious release of such records.

If a former president should choose to assert privilege over a sensitive record, a requester may challenge the privilege claim in court. Such proceedings are routine when there is disagreement about the release of Executive Branch records under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). Some have argued that the burden should lie with the former president in disputes over disclosure. But this would create the awkward situation of a former president's being forced to sue the current one a suggestion that is neither constitutionally proper nor sound policy.

Recently President Bush signed an executive order to further implement the 1978 Presidential Records Act, the law that establishes a process for reviewing and releasing documents of former presidents. This order ensures expeditious disclosure of documents to provide historians, scholars and the public valuable insights into the way our government works.

Freedom and openness are at the core of our government. The president's order was crafted to provide as much information as possible to the public while also drawing on sound legal policy to respect the constitutional rights of former presidents.

For months skeptics have questioned President Bush's motives in establishing these sensible procedures. The order, they said, was an affront to open government and would put procedural roadblocks in the way of disclosure of important historical information. The critics were wrong.

Today, consistent with the president's order, the National Archives and Records Administration will publicly release thousands of pages of records belonging to former president Reagan. These documents represent all that have been reviewed by the administration after receipt from the Reagan Library--and this is only one of what will be many routine releases of records belonging to former presidents, including otherwise privileged records.

Today's action shows that that President Bush's executive order can and will work as intended--to facilitate appropriate and expeditious public release of presidential records consistent with the Constitution and the act.

At times, certain documents may still be so sensitive that they must remain confidential. In some cases, release of documents could jeopardize our national security, and while the pursuit of history is invaluable to our society, it should not endanger American lives. Nor should it deprive a president of candid advice while making crucial decisions.

Recognizing this, the Presidential Records Act expressly provides that former presidents retain the right to assert available privileges over their presidential records after the act's 12-year period of presumed non-disclosure expires. HEADLINE: To Us, Starr Is an American Hero

BYLINE: Robert J. Bittman; Brett M. Kavanaugh; Solomon J. Wisenberg

BODY:

Richard Cohen's Oct. 26 op-ed broadside, "So Long, Ken Starr," grossly mischaracterizes Ken Starr and his investigation. Cohen ridicules the Lewinsky case, but he ignores the following facts:

Starr uncovered a massive effort by the president to lie under oath and obstruct justice. The House impeached the president. Fifty senators voted to remove the president. Thirty-two other senators who voted to retain the president nonetheless signed a resolution that condemned Bill Clinton for giving "false or misleading testimony" and "impeding discovery of evidence in judicial proceedings" and concluded that he had "violated the trust of the American people." Judge Susan Webber Wright held the president in contempt because he intentionally provided "false, misleading and evasive answers" and "undermined the integrity of the judicial system."

Those conclusions fully vindicate Starr's findings and make Cohen's diatribes against the case ("woe is me, the Republic is in peril") look juvenile. Cohen contends that certain information in Starr's referral to Congress should not have been made public and that Starr threw "everything out on the lawn for all the neighbors to see." But Starr submitted the report to Congress under seal. It was a bipartisan Congress that publicly released the report without even reviewing it beforehand.

Cohen argues that Starr "trapped" the president. Not so. The president "trapped" himself. Clinton knew long before his civil deposition (because Wright repeatedly so ruled) that his other sexual encounters with subordinate employees were relevant to Paula Jones's sexual harassment case. Yet the president decided to roll the dice and lie under oath and obstruct justice.

Starr did not cause this; Clinton did. Nor did Starr cause the president later to lie to the grand jury, to parse the meaning of the words "is" and "sex" and on and on. Clinton did all of this with premeditation and on his own. The word that ordinarily describes such behavior is not "trapped" but "guilty."

Cohen complains that Starr began by investigating Whitewater and "wound up" investigating the Lewinsky matter. But Janet Reno, not Starr, gave the independent counsel jurisdiction over new matters.

Cohen also notes--ominously--that Starr is a Republican. Special prosecutors traditionally have been respected lawyers of the opposite party. Archibald Cox investigated President Richard Nixon. Former senator John C. Danforth is investigating Janet Reno. The reason is simple: A decision not to indict in a politically charged case is more credible if made by a prosecutor of the opposite party. And a conviction requires that 12 citizen jurors vote for conviction, the procedural check on the "aggressive" prosecutor.

As important as what Cohen says is what he does not say. Cohen does not mention Starr's successful investigation of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan. Starr obtained convictions of Jim and Susan McDougal, of Gov. Jim Guy Tucker (the first conviction this century of a sitting governor) and of former associate attorney general Webster Hubbell.

And Cohen ignores Starr's investigation of the Clintons' involvement in Madison and Whitewater and his investigations of the Vince Foster, travel office and FBI files issues. Why? Starr brought no criminal indictments and submitted no impeachment referrals in those matters. Starr recognized more than anyone that criminal prosecution (or an impeachment referral, in the case of the president) is not a political game--that a prosecutor should not invoke those processes unless the evidence is strong, almost overwhelming.

Cohen also skips past Starr's remarkable legal record. Starr won nearly every dispute: executive privilege, Secret Service privilege, government attorney-client privilege, jurisdictional issues, the list goes on.

Contrary to Cohen's table-thumping, the record establishes that Starr was a thorough, fair, ethical and successful prosecutor. His record is one of extraordinary accomplishment and integrity. And to us, Starr is an American hero.

Over time, fair-minded people will come to hail Starr's enormous contributions to the country and see the presidentially approved smear campaign against him for what it was: a disgraceful effort to undermine the rule of law, an episode that will forever stand, together with the underlying legal and moral transgressions to which it was connected, as a dark chapter in American presidential history.

The writers served as attorneys in the office of independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr.

was just on FOX criticizing DOJ, the people advising the President, etc.
Theorized that we don't want to provide the documents bc we're covering up for years of rogue FBI activities.

Gang: Senate is not back until January 23 as I understand it.
1. Rachel, as our recess expert, can formal nominations occur before Jan. 23? (Viet: any thoughts?)
2. If not, should we plan to do all the nominations on the 23rd but have them announced on Friday the 18th so that we can say "there were ___ judicial nominations announced during first year"

Voice mail: If you are going to be out you have the option of creating a temporary greeting telling callers you are out and when you will return. You can refer them to 456-2632. I don't recommend putting the Signal number on your voice mail- if they need to get you through signal they should already know the number or they can go through the WH operator at 456-1414.

Email: under "actions" - then "mail tools" - then "out of office" is a way to set up a auto reply to folks telling them you are out and when you will be back in. You can customize this as well.

Fraction of Reagan's Confidential Papers Approved for Release (WPost)
By George Lardner Jr.

The Washington Post, December 21, 2001

The White House announced yesterday that it will make public next month some 8,000 pages of former president Ronald Reagan's confidential papers under the provisions of a hotly debated executive order that President Bush issued last month.

White House counsel Alberto R. Gonzales said the action shows "President Bush intended the order to facilitate the expeditious release of the records."

Critics of the decree, which is being contested in federal court here, said a much bigger batch should have been released last January under the provisions of the 1978 Presidential Records Act and that Bush's order is an illegitimate attempt to amend that law by executive fiat.

Officials at the National Archives and Records Administration, which administers the law through its presidential library system, said the 8,000 pages -- part of a 68,000-page collection of confidential communications between Reagan and his advisers -- will be released Jan. 3 at the Reagan presidential library in Simi Valley, Calif.

They said the documents could not be made public here at the same time because they are in many cases simply pages from larger documents available only at the Reagan library.

Gonzales said in an opinion column in yesterday's Washington Post that the release is "only one of what will be many routine releases of records belonging to former presidents, including otherwise privileged records."

White House spokeswoman Anne Womack said another installment was received from Reagan's representatives Wednesday and is being reviewed by Gonzales's office. She said "a significant amount" of the entire 68,000-page collection should be available by late January.

Under Bush's Nov. 1 order, a former president or a sitting president -- or in some cases the family of a deceased president -- can block the release of records requested by journalists, scholars or others and force them to go to court to challenge such decisions.

Under interpretations of the Presidential Records Act in force before Nov. 1, a former president could claim privilege for particular documents, but the archivist of the United States could overrule him, and the former president would have to go to court to sustain his claim.

Although Reagan's representatives had reviewed the collection in 2000 and voiced no objection to the release last January, as Archives officials had proposed, Gonzales blocked disclosure so Bush could decide whether to invoke "a constitutionally based privilege or take other appropriate action."

Historian Hugh Graham, who had asked for the confidential Reagan records, said he was "underwhelmed" by the forthcoming release and "the main problem remains with the executive order which gives [past and present presidents] the authority to withhold any document without explanation and without time limits."

Terri -

Please see the attached op ed attached to Anne Womack's email.

The Judge would like for you to work up a letter to the editor of the Washington Post addressing the gubernatorial records. The Judge indicated that this letter needs to be written this week and would appreciate it if you would allow Brett Kavanaugh a chance to review your draft letter prior to submission to the Post. Brett's email address is referenced above.

Thank you and please call me at 202-456-2632 if you have any questions.

I note and raise questions about two statements I have seen attributed to the Special Master in the media: (i) encouraging people to waive their rights to sue and to choose the DOJ program; and (ii) telling people to ask for more money in the claims process and seek a hearing [today's NY Times], implying that such money would be available. The first of these statements strikes me as arguably beyond the proper role of an agency adjudicatory official administering an administrative claims process. He can certainly answer questions, but for him to affirmatively advocate a waiver of one's rights seems dubious. The second of these strikes me as arguably either deceptive to the claimants or inconsistent with the regulations. Either way, that seems a potential problem. If I am right about either of these concerns, someone needs to talk to him. If I am wrong, which is entirely possible, just let me know. Thanks.

wonder if the Chronicle knows that the Founding Fathers kept the records of the Constitutional Convention under lock and key for 30 years .
. . guess they did that to hide their "misguided or shameful decisions"

American History: Bush, Cheney would limit ability and right to learn it (HChron)
Editorial

The Houston Chronicle, December 26, 2001

In a column that appeared on the Chronicle's editorial page Dec. 23, George F. Will praised Lynn Cheney for championing the study of American history. But if Cheney's spouse, Vice President Dick Cheney, and his boss, President Bush, had their way, only a limited history of American government would be available to coming generations.

The vice president still refuses to tell Americans which energy company executives he consulted while drafting the Bush administration's national energy policy, or how much the executives contributed to various campaign chests for the privilege. President Bush has issued an order giving both former and sitting presidents the power to deny public access to aging White House documents that belong by law to the American people.

In her recent talk at Princeton University, Lynn Cheney lamented a survey that found only 22 percent of seniors at elite college campuses knew that the words "government of the people, by the people and for the people" were from Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address. What is worse, however, is an administration that can quote the Gettysburg Address but declines to be guided by its themes.

In an article on the Chronicle's Dec. 21 Outlook page, White House counsel Alberto R. Gonzales defended President Bush's effort to limit public access to presidential records that are, at minimum, 12 years old.
Gonzales argues that unclassified, decades-old White House documents can be too sensitive to be shown to the American people who own them. He misses the point that it is not the documents that endanger national security, but the misguided or shameful executive decisions they might reveal.

The president's lawyer says the release of sensitive Reagan administration papers could deprive President Bush and future presidents of candid advice. That is laughable on its face. Politicians of both parties fondly allude to the Founding Fathers and their ideals, as Lynn Cheney did at Princeton. Too few are scrupulous enough to act on those ideals, and some appear not to know the difference.

If we can't get anybody else on board (which I really hope we can), this schedule is fine with me. I take it this means spending Monday night, not Sunday night, for me; Brett spending Tuesday night, etc.

Having canvassed my colleagues, it looks like we'll have a group of at least 10 and maybe 15 (probably heavier on U.S. Attorneys than judges) ready for the President's considerations by around 1/10. I would recommend trying to get 20-30 minutes for a meeting early in the week of 1/14.

This LA Times story is somewhat relevant as we look ahead (way ahead) to hearing/confirmation prospects for judges.

"Although the 2002 midterm congressional elections are still 10 months away, a combination of factors) from President Bush's soaring popularity to candidate recruitment) are boosting Republican chances of not only holding control of the House but also retaking the Senate.

"Historically, the party in control of the White House tends to lose seats in Congress two years after a president is elected. But this year's races now appear to be a tossup in the latest surveys, Democratic and Republican strategists say.

"With control of both the House and Senate at stake, both parties are preparing to pour massive funds into a few dozen contests and dispense legislative favors to help shaky incumbents. The tight campaign also will ripple through the congressional agenda, as lawmakers weigh competing pressures: whether to raise money and score political points, or cut bipartisan deals. . . .

"Several recent developments have favored Republicans as the party seeks to win back what it briefly held at the outset of 2001: full control of both the executive and legislative branches of government. In the House, the once-a-decade redrawing of 435 district lines to account for population changes in the 2000 census now appears to have favored incumbents to an unusual degree. Analysts say the GOP could pick up one or two seats through the process.

"Those trends would likely bolster the slim 222-211 House Republican majority. In the Senate, an even slimmer 50-49-1 Democratic majority suffered a string of year-end legislative embarrassments. Moreover, party insiders say, Republicans were able to recruit polished candidates to challenge vulnerable Democratic incumbents and compete for three open seats."

If we can't get anybody else on board (which I really hope we can), this schedule is fine with me. I take it this means spending Monday night, not Sunday night, for me; Brett spending Tuesday night, etc.

If there is a need to get a meeting on the books w/ the President for next week or the week after it would probably be wise to get our request in sooner rather than later.

If you guys will let me know when/if needed that would be great.

Thanks!

Brett--

After our conversation this morning I talked further with folks here about where we stand on this. I think it probably would make sense for us to get together initially with a small set of lawyers who could go through some initial boxes and help you all get a quick sense of what sort of written protocol might be suitable. With that in place, a larger review team could then be assembled to use the protocol in an overall initial review, followed by a further OLC review of any documents tagged by the initial reviewers. Does this make sense to you? What is your schedule like tomorrow and Friday?

Sorry for the weird message, my computer freaked out on me....

What I was asking for was the names of a few reliable law professors who could recommend excellent law students who would be interested in interning with our office this summer. If I could get the names (and phone numbers if possible, if not, I can look it up if you give me the university), asap, that would be great.

Thanks.

The event is a Bush-Cheney campaign reunion. There is no fundraiser involved, it is just a chance for New Hampshire and Maine friends to visit with the President. He will arrive, deliver remarks, then mix and mingle with folks. Members of Congress will be invited and the official title of the event is New England Republican Leadership Reception.

If it is not a fundraiser, not a state party event, and not an event for a specific candidate, it becomes a close call whether it in fact should be considered a "political event" for these calculation purposes. Do we know more about it? Then, I can double check with my people at Office of Special Counsel to make sure we classify it correctly. It could be an event in the gray area where we have some discretion as to how to classify.

Sorry for the weird message, my computer freaked out on me....

What I was asking for was the names of a few reliable law professors who could recommend excellent law students who would be interested in interning with our office this summer. If I could get the names (and phone numbers if possible, if not, I can look it up if you give me the university), asap, that would be great.

Thanks.

Brett,
I am writing another piece about the entire issue of the Presidential Records Act and President George W. Bush's recent Executive Order, and am mentioning that the scholars met in December with the White House counsel's office so the two sides could exchange views. I would like to quote you in a couple of places, but under the ground rules we agreed to, I'm required to get your permission first. The first quote I would like to use, went (according to my notes), like this:
"Give us a little time here. We think you'll be happy with the procedures. We think they will work -- and work well." (You then invited the group to revisit the issue in six months or so, predicting that they might be pleasantly surprise by the results, before concluding....) "We'll work with you."

The other quote I would like to use came after you were asked why this administration got involved so deeply in this issue at all. You replied: "This was the first time (the law) had taken effect. We wanted to write regulations that would stand the test of time."

I note and raise questions about two statements I have seen attributed to the Special Master in the media: (i) encouraging people to waive their rights to sue and to choose the DOJ program; and (ii) telling people to ask for more money in the claims process and seek a hearing [today's NY Times], implying that such money would be available. The first of these statements strikes me as arguably beyond the proper role of an agency adjudicatory official administering an administrative claims process. He can certainly answer questions, but for him to affirmatively advocate a waiver of one's rights seems dubious. The second of these strikes me as arguably either deceptive to the claimants or inconsistent with the regulations. Either way, that seems a potential problem. If I am right about either of these concerns, someone needs to talk to him. If I am wrong, which is entirely possible, just let me know. Thanks.

The event is a Bush-Cheney campaign reunion. There is no fundraiser involved, it is just a chance for New Hampshire and Maine friends to visit with the President. He will arrive, deliver remarks, then mix and mingle with folks. Members of Congress will be invited and the official title of the event is New England Republican Leadership Reception.

Chairman Burton also sent a long letter to the Attorney General, which complicates matters some, or at least makes it evident that we need an overall strategy to address both letters and our next steps. We have scheduled a meeting for Monday at 11:15 in EEOB to discuss all of this with OLC, Chertoff, and DOJ Leg Affairs.

Steve: These are excellent questions. Thank you. I'd like to propose a couple of changes to White House participation in the process:

1. I may not be able to make it to some of the interviews. I'd like Deputy NSC Legal Advisor Steve DeVine to attend in my place.
2. In light of the Presidential approval requirement, the WH Counsel's Office would also like Associate Counsel to the President Brett Kavanaugh to attend, schedule permitting.
3. Finally, I'd like to ask that Jerry Schroeder be interviewed as well. Sorry to be slow in getting back about this. Is it too late to add Jerry to the list?

John

Bush Administration Under Fire For Claiming Privilege In FBI Informant Case. ABC News (1/6, story 9, Simpson) reported last night, &There's another controversy involving the White House tonight. At issue is the President's decision to block a congressional inquiry into the FBI's use of informants.8 ABC (Gerstein) added, &Joseph Salvati spent decades in prison for murder, even though the FBI knew he was innocent.8 Salvati was shown saying, &The FBI took away 30 years of my life, my family, my wife and my four children. That should never have to happen again.8 ABC added, &The FBI's Boston office kept quiet about Salvati to protect two informants, reputed mobsters Whitey Bulger and Steven Flemmi. While working for the FBI, they allegedly carried out at least 19 murders. Their FBI handler says his actions were authorized by top Justice Department officials.8 Former FBI agent Joseph Connolly was shown saying, &The strike force directed the FBI, my superiors, to confer a special status on Mr. Bulger and Mr. Flemmi. We were told they were to be left alone to continue to do what they were doing.8 ABC added, &Congress opened an investigation into the FBI's handling of top informants, but last month, President Bush invoked executive privilege, ordering the Justice Department not to turn over documents detailing prosecutors' internal discussions about the informants. The move puts Mr. Bush at odds with members of his own party.8 Rep. Dan Burton (R-IN) was shown saying, &If Congress cannot exercise its oversight responsibilities, then you end up with one branch of government, the executive branch, running everything, and they'll be able to control and cover up anything they want to.8 ABC added, &Traditionally, executive privilege has protected a president's right to confidential advice, but one law professor says Mr. Bush is trying to extend the privilege to decisions at all Federal agencies.8 Legal analyst Mark Rozell was shown saying, &I think the Bush team is trying to rewrite the rules on executive privilege. They are trying to expand the scope of executive privilege, I think, in almost breathtaking fashion.⁸ ABC added, &Bush Administration officials declined to be interviewed, but one former White House counsel says the President is right to resist.⁸ C. Boyden Gray was shown saying, &The enforcement of the criminal laws is a very unique area. It's one of a few areas that's committed exclusively to the President, who is charged by the Constitution with seeing that the laws are faithfully executed.⁸ ABC added, & Congressman Burton says he will not seek a court fight with the President, but he will hold hearings to expose the FBI's misconduct and to press Mr. Bush to cooperate with Congress.⁸

There's a cafeteria, such as it is, here in the OEOB. Or we could walk directly across the street to Cosi. Sounds like Brett is in too. Why don't you come to my office (149) when your meeting is out.

Great. I'm meeting with John Graham at 11-12 and then have a Jay meeting at 12:45. How should we hook up to grab a bite? Is there a cafeteria over there in OEOB?

I've got two meetings at OEOB tomorrow (Tuesday) with a brief break from 12 to 12:45. Would any of you be free to grab a very quick bite to eat at or near your shop?

Chad--

Terrific. Thanks for your help in getting them over here so soon.

All--

Ed made a great suggestion last week that's worth reiterating: Please leave a written record in the room of which boxes you've taken a look at; this will ensure that at least one person takes a preliminary look at each of the boxes.

REV_00138677

Let's plan to meet either on Thursday morning to assess where we are at that point preliminarily in terms of being able to craft a workable review protocol. What times work best for everyone? My schedule is relatively flexible that morning.

Thanks,

--Dan

Talked to Susan Dryden on Friday night and apparently, Chertoff decided he didn't want anyone from DOJ to be interviewed. they pointed him to the testimony on the subject. I still think we did the right thing, and it was a Sunday night report - no one watches.

Subject: Lunch tomorrow?

I've got two meetings at OEOB tomorrow (Tuesday) with a brief break from 12 to 12:45. Would any of you be free to grab a very quick bite to eat at or near your shop?

Bush nominated Estrada in May to the District of Columbia court, often a springboard to the U.S. Supreme Court. Last month, all 49 Republican senators signed a letter urging hearings for Estrada and Washington lawyer John Roberts, another nominee for the same court.

Estrada would be the first Hispanic judge on the D.C. court, and friends and foes say he has a chance to be the first Hispanic on the Supreme Court. White House counsel Alberto Gonzales is also seen as a possible nominee to the high court.

“Estrada is young and smart without a long paper trail, so the Bush administration might think his confirmation will be easier,” said Nan Aron, president of the Alliance for Justice, a coalition of largely liberal advocates opposed to Estrada.

Democrats controlling the Senate have moved on other Bush judgeships, with 28 confirmed since they took control in June -- better than the pace of the GOP Senate during the Clinton years. But they haven't scheduled hearings on Estrada or several other nominees.

‘NO CONSENSUS’

“The Judiciary Committee tried to move as many nominations as possible, and not go to the most difficult ones, where there is no consensus,” said David Carle, a spokesman for Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

Republicans see foot-dragging and have responded sharply.

“Democrats don't want a Hispanic appointed to this significant court because they understand he could be one of the president's first nominees on the Supreme Court,” said Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., last month. “They are literally racially profiling this nomination.”

Hispanic groups are generally supportive, but not completely.

The Latino Coalition and the Hispanic Business Roundtable are backing the nomination.

The Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund is studying Estrada's record and has not taken a position, said regional counsel Marisa Demeo.

“So often, you hear there are not enough qualified Latinos for these positions, but he is remarkably qualified,” said Gabriela Lemus, spokeswoman for the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC). “The Senate should give him a chance.”

APPROACH DESCRIBED

Estrada has written that he is a strict constructionist who would not “make law” as a judge. His backers note that as a lawyer in the solicitor general's office, Estrada strictly followed the provisions of racketeering law in one case, arguing against abortion protesters.

And the American Bar Association has given Estrada a rating of ``well-qualified."

But Bender, a Clinton appointee who supervised appellate litigation in several discrimination cases, said he ``could not trust Estrada's judgment" in following the law.

``He was very, very conservative and outspoken about it -- he felt the law on defendants' right had gone way too far," Bender said.

Bender, a civil rights advocate, said he sometimes disagreed with Roberts -- Bush's other nominee for the D.C. court -- but would support Roberts ``because he is well-qualified."

Michael Gerhardt, who has studied confirmation battles over the years, said the Estrada fight is another episode in the ongoing battle to define the ideological middle ground.

Each side tries to depict the other as outside the mainstream in such fights, Gerhardt said.

``Defining who is really a moderate, who is too ideological, is at the core of the debate," he said.

Op/Eds

The Chief Justice Speaks

The Washington Post

Friday, January 4, 2002

CHIEF JUSTICE William Rehnquist is one of the few prominent Republicans with standing to complain about the way the Democratic-controlled Senate is processing judicial nominations. Back in 1997 Mr. Rehnquist courageously chided Senate Republicans in his year-end report on the judiciary for delays in confirming President Clinton's nominees. "Some current nominees have been waiting a considerable time for a Senate Judiciary Committee vote or a final floor vote," he wrote. "The Senate should act within a reasonable time to confirm or reject them." His principled call then for a fair and expeditious process makes his insistence in this year's report that the Senate "ought to act on each nominee and to do so within a reasonable time" a rarity in the general hypocrisy of the confirmation mess: a consistent position.

Unfortunately, Mr. Rehnquist did not content himself with using his unusual moral authority on the question of judicial nominations to give the process a push. Instead, he began his discussion of the vacancy problem by positing a dubious link between the issue and the war on terrorism. He noted that "the federal courts have functioned through wars, natural disasters, and terrorist attacks" but said that for them "to continue to function effectively and efficiently . . . judicial vacancies must be timely filled with well-qualified candidates." This adoption of what has become standard Republican rhetoric on judges is unnecessary, and the argument itself is unconvincing. No matter how short-staffed a court, any judge is going to drop his other work when the FBI comes in with an emergency search warrant request. The highest-priority matters don't tend to be the work that suffers.

The reason the Senate should consider judges quickly is exactly the same now as it was before Sept. 11. The institutional needs of the judiciary should not be held hostage to politics. And while the Senate's constitutional duty to advise on and consent to the president's nominees may legitimately involve rejecting his nominations, it is an abdication of that duty simply to refuse to consider them. Lengthy, irrational delays are also unfair to the nominees in question and, along with low judicial pay, are among the serious obstacles to recruiting good judges. Mr. Rehnquist is right to speak up on this issue -- irrespective of which party controls the White House and which party controls the Senate. It is no less important for having nothing to do with terrorism.

Senate Holdup; Our Position: The U.S. Senate Should Stop Playing Politics With Judicial Nominations

The Orlando Sentinel
Sunday, January 6, 2001

The U.S. Senate needs to step up the pace to confirm or reject the people nominated to federal judgeships by President George W. Bush.

Prompt action is required because 11 percent -- 94 of the authorized 853 district, trade and appeals-court judgeships -- are vacant. That's the largest number of vacancies since early 1994, when there were 118 empty seats on federal benches. There's one judicial vacancy in Florida's middle district, which includes Orlando. Vacancies increase the back-breaking workload of cases that judges preside over. That workload can contribute to delays throughout the court system. It's not uncommon for individual judges to preside over hundreds of complicated cases during the course of a year.

The situation has become so critical that U.S. Chief Justice William Rehnquist issued a Mayday call for help last week in his annual report on the federal judiciary. He noted that the delays and arduous confirmation process is discouraging some qualified people from accepting a nomination to the federal bench.

The solution rests in the hands of the Senate, which is charged with confirming judicial nominees. Those nominations sometimes become political soccer balls. When the Republicans held the majority during the Democratic administration of President Bill Clinton, his nominations had a difficult time making it through the confirmation process.

Now that the Democrats hold the upper hand in the Senate, nominations made by Mr. Bush, a Republican, are crawling. When the Senate adjourned for the Christmas break, 37 nominees were awaiting action by the Senate.

The prompt and smooth administration of justice in the federal system is much more important than partisan muscle-flexing.

All presidents are entitled to nominate judges with whom they are politically comfortable. That discretion generally should be respected by senators.

The way to avoid logjams in the nomination process is for senators to avoid getting hung up on political differences they may have with individual nominees.

The candidates' fitness to serve in the lifetime judicial positions should be evaluated on the basis of the nominee's integrity, personal background, professional experience, legal knowledge and temperament.

Presidents also have an obligation to avoid nominating people who have weak qualifications for the post. Such nominations are needlessly provocative. They are certain to draw political attacks and cause delays in the confirmation process.

The ongoing international war against terrorism and increasingly complex issues in technology and the business world are sure to create cases that will make the federal courts more important than ever.

Filling the vacancies on the federal bench must be a top priority for senators.

Order for the Courts

The News and Observer
Saturday, January 5, 2002

Anyone watching the bitter nomination and appointment process for federal judgeships has to come away perplexed. Democrats like to point out that President Bush has gotten a higher percentage of his judicial nominees through the Senate grinder at this time than former President Clinton.

But that partisan point, legitimate though it may be, doesn't erase the fact that the federal court system is understaffed on the bench. Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, in his annual report on the courts at the end of 2001, noted that of 853 federal judgeships, 94 are vacant, about 11 percent. That's not as bad as the Clinton years -- when Republicans also dragged their feet on appointments thanks to their ongoing contentious relationship with Clinton -- but it's too many -- the most at the start of a year since 1994.

Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, chairman of the Judiciary Committee that opens the approval process, blames the tumult in the nation and the Senate, with some justification.

Besides Sept. 11, senators suffered through the emptying of Senate offices due to anthrax and political upheaval with a change in leadership after Sen. James Jeffords of Vermont became an independent and gave the majority to Democrats at mid year.

President Bush, of course, should expect opposition if he goes to the fringes of conservatism to find nominees. Judgeships, after all, are lifetime appointments. Democrats wouldn't be doing their job if they didn't subject nominees to rigorous debate, a logic that holds when Republicans are the Senate bosses. Federal judges have tremendous power, and those who are granted it must be men and women of sound judgment and reason, qualities than need not have a partisan litmus test.

Bush does have every right to fill judgeships with candidates who share his conservative philosophy.

A well-functioning judiciary is always important. But the war against terrorism has raised a host of basic constitutional issues that the courts likely will have to untangle in the months and years to come.

Now more than ever, Rehnquist seems to say, we need a strong, complete federal judiciary. Seeing to that and making sure the process doesn't get skewed by partisanship is a duty shared equally by the president and Congress.

Reluctant Jurists; Problems with Pay and Confirmation Dampen Top Lawyers' Aspirations to be Federal Judges

Newsday

Saturday, January 5, 2002

Relatively low pay and lengthy confirmation processes have soured many lawyers in private practice on seeking appointment to the federal bench, says the nation's top judge. The Senate and the president should heed the warning of Chief Justice William Rehnquist.

If the pool of potential judicial nominees continues to shrink, the current high quality of the federal bench will eventually be eroded. In the interest of justice, Washington should deliver timely confirmation hearings and votes, and a formula for regular judicial pay raises. Highly qualified nominees who are comfortably in the mainstream of political ideology usually win easy confirmation. It is when a president from one party asks a Senate controlled by the other party to confirm nominees with controversial views that the process runs aground.

A Democratic Senate, its plate full after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, confirmed 28 of Republican President George W. Bush's judicial nominees in 2001. But at year's end there were still 94 vacancies. Between 1998 and 2000, with Democrat Bill Clinton in the White House and a Republican Senate, 32 nominees got no confirmation hearings at all.

Presidents impede the process when they try to stack the courts with ideologues. But the acceptable political mainstream must be broad. The courts benefit from ideological diversity and from the presence of judges who follow a variety of career paths to the bench.

Nominees in private practice are the ones most affected by delayed confirmation and lower pay. They lose business while awaiting confirmation because they cannot assure prospective clients that they'll be available to complete their work. And for top lawyers, judicial salaries - $150,000 for district court judges, $192,000 for the chief justice - are a pay cut. Lawyers in the nation's top firms earn that much just a few years out of school. Government can't compete with private-sector compensation. But judges should get raises at regular intervals that exceed the rate of inflation.

Judges perform a demanding, critical public service. Those who do it shouldn't be expected to sacrifice unnecessarily.

Approval Process, Pay for Jurists Need Reform; Highly Political Vetting Process, Low Salaries Could Cripple Federal Judiciary

By Tom Teepen
Dayton Daily News
Friday, January 4, 2002

William H. Rehnquist has a point. Two, actually.

The Chief Justice of the United States, in his annual year-end report, warned that unless pay is boosted sharply and the political vetting of nominees is streamlined, the nation could wind up with a federal judiciary that is substantially bureaucratized and, virtually by definition then, dehumanized. With a scheduled 3.4 percent cost-of-living increase this year, district judges will make $150,000, courts of appeal judges $159,100 and Supreme Court associate justices $184,400. (Rehnquist will pull in $192,600.)

That's big money to most of us, and it would be easy to dismiss Rehnquist's pitch as the bellyaching of the well-to-do.

But, in fact, big law firms in major cities are paying salaries close to those of district judges to first-year lawyers, youths with law-review ink still on their fingers.

The public can expect federal judges to count the prestige of a judgeship and the opportunity to make an important civic contribution as at least some compensation for lower wages than they could make in private practice. It is unreasonable, however, to expect many of the most able candidates to accept what amounts to financial devastation.

As a result of the lagging pay, Rehnquist notes, an increasing number of federal jurists are coming from public rather than private practice - from prosecuting shops, public-defender programs and such - where the pay is so low $150,000 offers a lifestyle change.

Attorneys from private practice bring - not universally but typically - a greater real-world understanding of law to the judge's job than do public attorneys who have been practicing stickler's law at the second decimal place. The same can be said, by the way, of many political appointees. In any event, a mix on the federal bench is best.

Rehnquist is right, too, in saying the Senate approval process has become a political torture putting off potential nominees.

As he did in scolding GOP Congresses for sidelining President Bill Clinton's judicial nominees, the chief justice now chides the current Democratic Senate for holding up President George W. Bush's picks, but the larger blame has to go to Rehnquist's own party.

The Senate isn't breaking any speed records with Bush's choices, but neither is it as balky as recent Republican Congresses were. And where Clinton put forward essentially moderate nominees who should have been speedily approved, Bush has proposed a cohort that is one of the most ideologically vivid - lurid? - ever advanced. Careful, indeed skeptical, hearings are called for.

The GOP's right, in an avowed campaign to capture the federal bench, has extended its sly naming game to the judiciary - casting, and dismissing, as 'left-wing' or 'liberal' everyone who is not doctrinally conservative. (And the watchdog media, who bark their fool heads off when some second-tier pol empties the petty-cash drawer, lets the right get away with murdering whole political identities.)

The pay matter can be fixed quickly and cheaply with simple legislation, and should be. The confirmation mess won't end until both parties go back to making moderate appointments and the GOP stops being a willing partner in its right's scheming.

Bush Nominations Delayed

The Herald

Friday, January 4, 2002

The nation is ill served by senatorial foot-dragging in approving presidential nominations for various posts. But the delay is nothing new, and the GOP's self-righteous hand-wringing is more than a little hypocritical. Of the more than 500 executive branch positions that require Senate confirmation, about 350 were filled in 2001. But 70 nominees were left unconfirmed when Congress adjourned in late December.

Nominees were being rubber-stamped by the Republican-controlled Senate early in Bush's first year. But that came to a screeching halt when Vermont Sen. James Jeffords defected from the GOP, declaring himself an independent, thereby handing control of that body to the Democrats.

Some Republicans have advised Bush to use recess appointments while Congress is not in session, which would allow appointees to serve until January 2003 without Senate confirmation. But that tends to cast the nomination in a poor light, indicating the Senate has no confidence in the nominee. It also practically ensures the nominee never will be officially confirmed.

Senate Republicans have, predictably, complained about the delay. Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, senior Republican on the Judiciary Committee, said Democrats have made a "systematic and calculated effort to confirm the absolute minimum number of President Bush's judicial nominees that they believe will be acceptable to the American public."

Hatch also asserted that his party "did not play such games when Bill Clinton was president." Oh, really? The record indicates otherwise. The Senate confirmed 28 judicial nominees last year. In 1996, when Hatch was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the Senate confirmed only 17.

In 1999, Hatch froze consideration of all nominees for several months to put pressure on Clinton to nominate an attorney Hatch wanted for a district judgeship in Utah. Under the past six years of Republican control of the Senate, confirmations, judicial nominations in particular, slowed to a crawl. Some nominees languished for years. In fact, some slots are open now because nominees weren't confirmed during the Clinton years. So, to some degree, the Democrats are demonstrating that both parties can play that game. Unfortunately, political games impede smoothly functioning government.

The Senate has a responsibility to advise and consent on presidential nominations. And, in some cases, delays may be justified. There are legitimate reasons to be wary of controversial nominations such as Otto Reich, Bush's nominee to be assistant secretary of state for Western Hemisphere affairs, and Eugene Scalia, son of Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia and Bush's pick to be the Labor Department's top lawyer.

Clearly, however, the process is flawed. Political spite is not a legitimate reason to hold up presidential nominations. Leaders in both parties need to seek common ground. Nonetheless, it's worth noting that Democrats didn't create this mess, and Republican complaints to the contrary are an attempt to rewrite recent history.

Senate Politics Damage Federal Courts

By Wes Haden
The Chattanooga Times
Friday, January 4, 2001

In the best tradition of blind justice -- that is a court system that does not take sides -- Chief Justice William Rehnquist once again has appealed to the U.S. Senate to put aside its seemingly endless bickering and attend to the business of approving new federal judges.

Though Justice Rehnquist's latest plea is pointedly directed to the sitting Democratic-controlled Senate, it is not a partisan request at all. The chief justice made the same request during the latter part of Bill Clinton's tenure when Republicans controlled the Senate and judicial appointments were, as they are now, caught up in endless political machinations. Justice Rehnquist has sound reason to push recalcitrant legislators. There are nearly 100 vacant federal judgeships around the country, slightly above 10 percent of the total. If federal courts are to provide prompt trials and efficient justice, as they are mandated to do, they must have a full complement of judges. Given the roadblocks put up in the fractious Senate over the past few years, that's unlikely to happen anytime soon.

Warning that the large number of vacancies "were undermining the administration of justice," the chief justice called on the Senate to "act with reasonable promptness" on the president's judicial nominees. The Senate, he correctly implied in his annual report on the federal judiciary, should put the nation's needs ahead of political chicanery.

In the past, pleas for assistance in matters of this kind from the judicial branch to the legislative branch have gone pretty much unheeded. The Senate did as it pleased -- and approved nominees only when it saw fit. That is no longer an acceptable way to conduct business.

Federal court dockets in many places are clogged because of past intransigence on the part of senators. Their persistent refusal to vote on judicial appointees whose ideologies differ with their party's orientation has created a problem that is fast becoming a national scandal.

To make matters worse, the new anti-terrorist laws enacted after Sept. 11 are already spawning litigation that will further tax the federal judicial system. Without the swift action sought by the chief justice, the situation is likely to worsen.

In recent years, the Senate, regardless of the majority party, has preferred to play partisan politics with judicial nominations rather than responsibly fill its role in approving judges for the trial and appellate courts.

It's time for those games to end. America and Americans are living in difficult times and it is more important than ever that the rule of law be paramount. The Senate can assure that it is by voting yea or nay on the judicial nominations when it returns to business on Jan. 23.

Rehnquist Decries Low Pay, Shrinking Pool of Judge Candidates

By Tony Mauro
Legal Times
Monday, January 7, 2002

The New Year's Day lament from Chief Justice William Rehnquist was familiar: Federal judges are not paid enough, and Congress needs to do something about it.

But in describing the negative impact of low judicial salaries, Rehnquist made a fresh and even surprising new argument. He claimed that the pay situation was shifting the pool of potential judges away from private practitioners and more toward bankruptcy judges, magistrates, state court judges and even prosecutors and public defenders -- for whom a district or appellate judgeship would represent a raise in pay.

And that, Rehnquist bemoaned, could turn the U.S. judiciary into a less-respected European-style civil bureaucracy, in which lawyers become lifelong judges at the start of their careers, unleavened by private law practice.

"We must not drastically shrink the number of judicial nominees who have had substantial experience in private practice," Rehnquist said in his annual year-end report on the judiciary. "We have never had, and should not want, a judiciary composed only of those who are already in the public service."

The argument turned heads, especially coming from a man who was himself an assistant attorney general in the Nixon administration before joining the federal bench as an associate justice in 1971. It also raised the question -- a question Rehnquist himself often asks a lawyer who makes a novel argument at the Supreme Court -- namely, what support is there for his proposition?

Rehnquist offered only nostalgia as evidence. He waxed poetic about judges and justices through history who had spent most or all of their professional lives in private practice. Rehnquist invoked the names of Louis Brandeis, known as the "people's attorney" before joining the high court in 1916, and Thurgood Marshall, who was a private lawyer and then top lawyer for the NAACP before John F. Kennedy named him to the federal appeals bench. Learned Hand and Byron White were cited as well.

Even more powerfully, Rehnquist also said that John Brown, Richard Rives, Elbert Tuttle, and John Minor Wisdom, "well-known for their courage in enforcing this court's civil rights decisions as judges on the Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, all served almost exclusively in private practice before their appointments to the bench."

DOES MONEY MATTER?

Beyond Rehnquist's cavalcade of judicial titans who once hung out a shingle, there does appear to be some statistical evidence backing up his claim. But some judges and academics contacted after Rehnquist's report suggested that the trend is not as strong, lamentable, or salary-driven, as Rehnquist made it out to be.

"The observation may be true, but what difference does it make if we have a judiciary full of lower court judges?" says Washington University political science professor Lee Epstein, a longtime student of the federal judicial system. "I'd want to know more before saying it's a bad thing."

A. Thomas Small, a bankruptcy judge in North Carolina and former president of the Conference of Bankruptcy Judges, has no doubt on that question. "Experience as a bankruptcy judge is a good thing, and I am sure the chief justice appreciates that. But I would agree with him that you don't want to limit the field of nominees just to bankruptcy or magistrate judges."

Sam Joyner, an Oklahoma magistrate judge who also edits the Federal Courts Law Review, adds: "The chief justice is right that the best way to go is for those in private practice to join the judiciary. But a lot of magistrate judges have that experience, plus they have a track record [as judges] that's pretty helpful." Joyner himself was in private practice for 30 years before becoming a magistrate judge in 1995.

The salary of magistrate and bankruptcy judges is set at 92 percent of district judges' salary, which was recently boosted to $150,000. Thanks to a 3.4 percent cost-of-living adjustment for all Article III judges, an increase that Rehnquist expressed appreciation for in his report, appeals court judges are now paid $159,100, associate Supreme Court justices get $184,400, and the chief justice is paid $192,600.

Joyner, who sits in Tulsa, just lost two fellow magistrate judges -- Claire Eagan and James Payne -- to the district court bench in Oklahoma, so he has seen firsthand the trend that Rehnquist spotlighted.

Eagan and Payne are among the 64 people nominated to district or circuit judgeships so far by President George W. Bush. Of those 64, nearly half -- 31, to be exact -- were sitting state or federal judges or magistrate judges when nominated. Six more were in state or federal legal jobs, and five were academics or self-employed. Only 22 were partners in private law firms when nominated.

The Bush record is in line with a trend that Sheldon Goldman has seen over many decades.

Goldman, a political science professor at the University of Massachusetts, is the author of "Picking Federal Judges" and is generally regarded as the most reliable keeper of statistics about federal court nominees.

Sixty years ago, Goldman says, about one-third of district court appointees were drawn from the ranks of lower court and state court judges. In recent years, that number has grown to nearly one-half.

"There has been a long-term trend toward a professionalization of the judiciary," says Goldman. But he suggests that the trend has been driven as much by other factors as by salary.

For one thing, incumbent judges and government lawyers have a track record on issues that might be important to the appointing president. For another, they may have already been through the confirmation process -- though, as Goldman notes, that did not help Robert Bork or Clarence Thomas much when they were nominated to the Supreme Court.

The statistics about the jobs that judges held when nominated also obscure the fact that most judges, magistrates, and government attorneys had considerable private practice experience earlier in their careers. Rehnquist, for example, practiced law for 16 years in Phoenix before joining the Justice Department. Bankruptcy and magistrate judges, appointed by district or circuit judges, are required to have practiced law before seeking the jobs.

EUROPE'S WAY

The European experience that Rehnquist offered as an unenviable contrast is far different. Judges are more like lifelong bureaucrats in many European nations, says American University law professor Herman Schwartz, who has studied several judicial systems abroad.

"They cover their asses, they are tightly controlled by appeals courts, and they are low-status and low-income," says Schwartz. "Here, people snap to attention when a federal judge walks into the room."

So how much of a factor is low salary in the judicial selection process? Bush administration officials would not comment publicly on that question or on Rehnquist's thesis. But one top official, when asked how often prospective nominees drop out because of money, says, "It has happened on occasion, but is not frequent."

The American Bar Association and the Federal Bar Association last year issued a report

supporting the chief justice's plea for higher judicial pay, asserting that salary was "the single most important factor discouraging potential candidates from seeking appointment," although it offered only anecdotal evidence.

Goldman says one piece of tangible evidence that salary is an issue is that those nominated to the federal bench tend to be wealthier than in decades past -- and presumably better able to handle a dip in pay. Roughly 40 percent of Clinton appointees to the federal bench reported net worth of $1 million or more, Goldman calculates. In his 2000 year-end report issued last January, Rehnquist said, "We cannot afford a judiciary made up primarily of the wealthy."

A. Raymond Randolph, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, says a related tax issue also works as a disincentive for potential nominees.

"Congress needs to look into the problems caused by the transition that some people face when going from private practice to a judgeship," Randolph says. "Often, in order to avoid frequent recusals, a new judge has to convert his or her investments from stocks into mutual funds. They have to take this big hit in capital gains taxes when they do this. Congress should look into granting an exemption in this circumstance."

Those who minimize the salary issue say the honor of a presidential appointment and the prestige of the federal bench -- complete with life tenure, law clerks, and other perks -- still lure top candidates from the private bar.

The story is often told of the lighthearted but revealing exchange of letters nearly two years ago between 4th Circuit Judge J. Michael Luttig and John Roberts Jr., partner at Washington, D.C.'s Hogan & Hartson. Hearing that first-year associate salaries were approaching those of federal judges, Luttig "applied" for a first-year position at Hogan.

Roberts, who is now a Bush appointee to the appeals bench, whimsically turned Luttig down. "First, our associates are expected to work more than one week each month, and we do not give them the entire summer off," Roberts wrote. "Second, while it is always a possibility, we do not guarantee our associates life tenure. Third, while we offer a wide range of support, few of our associates are assigned three full-time law clerks to assist them. And finally, although we have adopted a 'casual Friday' policy, black robes do not qualify as appropriate attire."

Hispanic Nominee No Shoo-In; Estrada's Critics Say He's and Ideologue Unfit for Powerful Bench

By Frank Davies
The Charlotte Observer
Sunday, January 6, 2002

To the Bush administration, Miguel Estrada's nomination for a top federal judgeship is a brilliant opportunity. It combines impressive legal credentials, an immigrant success story and a chance to woo Hispanic voters.

Critics, however, view Estrada, a Honduran American who lacks judicial experience, as a Justice Clarence Thomas in the making - a young lawyer thrust toward the Supreme Court as a conservative ideologue, no more representative of Hispanics than Thomas was of blacks. It means the Estrada nomination to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals - the nation's second most powerful court - looms as one of this year's most politically charged nomination struggles in the Senate.

Estrada left Honduras at 17, joined his mother in New York, learned English in two years, graduated with honors from Harvard Law School, clerked for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, served as a prosecutor, and worked in the Justice Department for both the Clinton and first Bush administrations.

Now in private practice in Washington, Estrada, 40, is a favorite of conservatives.

He worked for GOP legal strategist Theodore Olson, now solicitor general, and has been a member of the Federalist Society, a right-of-center legal network influential in the current Bush administration.

Leaders of several Hispanic advocacy groups support him.

But a Clinton administration appointee who supervised some of Estrada's work in the Justice Department voiced reservations about him.

"Miguel is too much of an ideologue to be an appellate judge - you could not count on him to be fair or neutral," said Paul Bender, former deputy solicitor general.

With Congress returning Jan. 23, Republicans and conservative groups are pressing the Senate to act. Democrats who remember how the GOP held up one Hispanic judicial nominee, Richard Paez of California, for four years are in no hurry.

"This is a fight where Bush will see a real upside to push for Estrada, but Democratic senators are in no rush - they have long memories," said Michael Gerhardt, author of a recent book on presidential appointments.

Collins Accuses Democrats of Stall Tactics

By George Edmonson
The Atlanta Journal and Constitution
Sunday, January 6, 2002

Rep. Mac Collins (R-Ga.) last week renewed his accusation that Senate Democratic leaders are intentionally delaying President Bush's judicial nominations for political reasons.

Collins said that Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) and Judiciary Committee Chairman

Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) have been using the process to give Democrats an issue in this year's midterm congressional elections and in the 2004 presidential race.

"Daschle and Leahy are trying to obstruct the president's appointments so that they can show, in some warped twist of logic, that the president has not been an effective leader," Collins said in a statement.

"Daschle has one aim in the process, to lay the groundwork for his 2004 presidential bid and to show ineffective leadership by the Republican Party to increase the Democrats' margin of control in the Senate and to take control of the House," Collins said. "This is unconscionable and endangers our nation." Last year, the congressman accused Sen. Max Cleland (D-Ga.) of helping to delay nominations for political reasons. Cleland said he was only following the procedure the GOP under President Clinton.

But in his latest press release, Collins said Cleland had been responsive in helping to get two vacancies filled in the Middle Georgia district

Collins' statement said, in part, "I appreciate Senator Cleland's responsiveness to my request that he go to bat for the citizens of Georgia."

The Democrats, of course, deny any political skullduggery and, at the same time, say that the Republicans delayed or tried to delay judicial appointments during the Clinton administration.

Defense Lawyers Oppose Cassell Nomination

By Stephen Hunt
The Salt Lake Tribune
Saturday, January 5, 2002

Utah defense attorneys are publicly opposing Paul Cassell's nomination by President Bush to become the state's newest federal judge -- claiming he lacks the proper temperament to sit on the bench.

Cassell, a University of Utah law professor, is an outspoken champion of crime-victim rights, a death-penalty proponent and recently tried to abolish the long-standing rule that forces police to give crime suspects a so-called "Miranda warning" prior to interrogation. Susanne Gustin, president of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, claims Cassell's "habit of inserting himself into high-profile cases" makes him unfit to be a judge.

"We question his ability to provide a fair hearing," Gustin said Friday, the same day her Letter to the Editor about Cassell was published in The Tribune. "He's too much of an advocate and a judge has to be totally in the middle."

Gustin said she also planned to write the Senate Judiciary Committee, which must approve Cassell's nomination.

Most recently, Cassell was involved in the Robert Weitzel homicide case, representing the victims' families in their desire to have 2nd District Judge Thomas Kay removed from Weitzel's second trial. Family members and prosecutors accused Kay of bias against them.

Kay was removed for "apparent bias." But the judge who ordered Kay's recusal said he had "serious questions concerning the good faith" of Cassell and state prosecutors.

Despite similar objections by others, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, remains supportive of Cassell, said Hatch's press secretary, Heather Barney.

Parties Locked in Battle Over Hispanic's Bid for Court Seat

By Frank Davies

The Miami Herald

Monday, January 7, 2002

For the Bush administration, the nomination of Miguel Estrada to a top federal judgeship seemed like a sure winner. He possesses impressive legal credentials, his life story offers a dramatic example of success by an immigrant, and Hispanic voters would be favorably impressed by the GOP's selection.

But his nomination has languished in the Senate for months, and as more and more critics voice doubts, the fight to put Estrada on the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia -- the nation's second most powerful court -- is shaping up as one of this year's most contentious, politically charged struggles in the Senate.

The controversy reflects the importance of the Hispanic vote and the politics of payback, not to mention an ideological battle to define the middle ground of jurisprudence.

Opponents portray Estrada, a Honduran American who lacks judicial experience, as a Clarence Thomas in the making, a young lawyer thrust toward the Supreme Court as a conservative ideologue no more representative of Hispanics than Thomas was of blacks.

A former colleague who supervised some of Estrada's work in the Justice Department said he was "shocked" by Estrada's nomination.

"Miguel is too much of an ideologue to be an appellate judge -- you could not count on him to be fair or neutral," said Paul Bender, who was deputy solicitor general. "He is a terrific oral advocate, but I could not rely on his written work as a neutral statement of the law."

Estrada, like other judicial nominees, declined to discuss his career until a hearing on his nomination is held.

PRESSURE FOR ACTION

With Congress returning Jan. 23, Republicans in Congress and conservative groups are pushing for the Senate to act. Democrats who remember how the GOP held up one Hispanic nominee for a judgeship, Richard Paez of California, for four years are in no hurry.

“This is a fight where Bush will see a real upside to push for Estrada, but Democratic senators are in no rush -- they have long memories of how Republicans blocked Clinton's nominees,” said law professor Michael Gerhardt.

“This nomination shows that ideology does matter, and Estrada's Hispanic background adds an important element and will make a big difference,” said Gerhardt at The College of William & Mary.

But even those who don't like Estrada's politics or his fitness for the job concede that his life story is compelling.

He left Honduras at 17, joined his mother in New York, learned English in two years, achieved magna cum laude honors at Harvard Law School, clerked for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, served as a prosecutor, and worked in the Justice Department during the Clinton administration and the first Bush administration.

RIGHT OF CENTER

Now in private practice in Washington, Estrada, 40, is a favorite of conservatives. He worked for GOP legal strategist Theodore Olson, now solicitor general, and has been a member of the Federalist Society, a right-of-center legal network influential in the current Bush administration.

“His life story makes liberals swoon, but his politics make them shudder,” wrote New Republic editor Peter Beinart, who said President Bush is using “diversity games” to disguise a far-right nominee.

Estrada, who opposes abortion and has criticized some affirmative action measures, was hailed as a “star of the conservative legal movement” by William Buckley's National Review. Columnist Robert Novak described Estrada as part of “an all-star conservative team of lawyers.”

MINORITY HIRING

Estrada was one of the few minority group members to be hired as a law clerk by a Supreme Court justice, an issue that has prompted protests by several legal groups. When USA Today in 1998 reported on the very low percentage of minority clerks, Estrada dismissed the statistics.

“If there was some reason for under-representation, it would be something to look into,” Estrada told USA Today. “But I don't have any reason to think it's anything other than a reflection of trends in society.”

Bush nominated Estrada in May to the District of Columbia court, often a springboard to the U.S. Supreme Court. Last month, all 49 Republican senators signed a letter urging hearings for Estrada and Washington lawyer John Roberts, another nominee for the same court.

Estrada would be the first Hispanic judge on the D.C. court, and friends and foes say he has a chance to be the first Hispanic on the Supreme Court. White House counsel Alberto Gonzales is also seen as a possible nominee to the high court.

“Estrada is young and smart without a long paper trail, so the Bush administration might think his confirmation will be easier,” said Nan Aron, president of the Alliance for Justice, a coalition of largely liberal advocates opposed to Estrada.

Democrats controlling the Senate have moved on other Bush judgeships, with 28 confirmed since they took control in June -- better than the pace of the GOP Senate during the Clinton years. But they haven't scheduled hearings on Estrada or several other nominees.

‘NO CONSENSUS’

“The Judiciary Committee tried to move as many nominations as possible, and not go to the most difficult ones, where there is no consensus,” said David Carle, a spokesman for Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

Republicans see foot-dragging and have responded sharply.

“Democrats don't want a Hispanic appointed to this significant court because they understand he could be one of the president's first nominees on the Supreme Court,” said Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., last month. “They are literally racially profiling this nomination.”

Hispanic groups are generally supportive, but not completely.

The Latino Coalition and the Hispanic Business Roundtable are backing the nomination.

The Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund is studying Estrada's record and has not taken a position, said regional counsel Marisa Demeo.

“So often, you hear there are not enough qualified Latinos for these positions, but he is remarkably qualified,” said Gabriela Lemus, spokeswoman for the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC). “The Senate should give him a chance.”

APPROACH DESCRIBED

Estrada has written that he is a strict constructionist who would not “make law” as a judge. His backers note that as a lawyer in the solicitor general's office, Estrada strictly followed the provisions of racketeering law in one case, arguing against abortion protesters.

And the American Bar Association has given Estrada a rating of ``well-qualified."

But Bender, a Clinton appointee who supervised appellate litigation in several discrimination cases, said he ``could not trust Estrada's judgment" in following the law.

``He was very, very conservative and outspoken about it -- he felt the law on defendants' right had gone way too far," Bender said.

Bender, a civil rights advocate, said he sometimes disagreed with Roberts -- Bush's other nominee for the D.C. court -- but would support Roberts ``because he is well-qualified."

Michael Gerhardt, who has studied confirmation battles over the years, said the Estrada fight is another episode in the ongoing battle to define the ideological middle ground.

Each side tries to depict the other as outside the mainstream in such fights, Gerhardt said.

``Defining who is really a moderate, who is too ideological, is at the core of the debate," he said.

Op/Eds

The Chief Justice Speaks

The Washington Post

Friday, January 4, 2002

CHIEF JUSTICE William Rehnquist is one of the few prominent Republicans with standing to complain about the way the Democratic-controlled Senate is processing judicial nominations. Back in 1997 Mr. Rehnquist courageously chided Senate Republicans in his year-end report on the judiciary for delays in confirming President Clinton's nominees. "Some current nominees have been waiting a considerable time for a Senate Judiciary Committee vote or a final floor vote," he wrote. "The Senate should act within a reasonable time to confirm or reject them." His principled call then for a fair and expeditious process makes his insistence in this year's report that the Senate "ought to act on each nominee and to do so within a reasonable time" a rarity in the general hypocrisy of the confirmation mess: a consistent position.

Unfortunately, Mr. Rehnquist did not content himself with using his unusual moral authority on the question of judicial nominations to give the process a push. Instead, he began his discussion of the vacancy problem by positing a dubious link between the issue and the war on terrorism. He noted that "the federal courts have functioned through wars, natural disasters, and terrorist attacks" but said that for them "to continue to function effectively and efficiently . . . judicial vacancies must be timely filled with well-qualified candidates." This adoption of what has become standard Republican rhetoric on judges is unnecessary, and the argument itself is unconvincing. No matter how short-staffed a court, any judge is going to drop his other work when the FBI comes in with an emergency search warrant request. The highest-priority matters don't tend to be the work that suffers.

The reason the Senate should consider judges quickly is exactly the same now as it was before Sept. 11. The institutional needs of the judiciary should not be held hostage to politics. And while the Senate's constitutional duty to advise on and consent to the president's nominees may legitimately involve rejecting his nominations, it is an abdication of that duty simply to refuse to consider them. Lengthy, irrational delays are also unfair to the nominees in question and, along with low judicial pay, are among the serious obstacles to recruiting good judges. Mr. Rehnquist is right to speak up on this issue -- irrespective of which party controls the White House and which party controls the Senate. It is no less important for having nothing to do with terrorism.

Senate Holdup; Our Position: The U.S. Senate Should Stop Playing Politics With Judicial Nominations

The Orlando Sentinel
Sunday, January 6, 2001

The U.S. Senate needs to step up the pace to confirm or reject the people nominated to federal judgeships by President George W. Bush.

Prompt action is required because 11 percent -- 94 of the authorized 853 district, trade and appeals-court judgeships -- are vacant. That's the largest number of vacancies since early 1994, when there were 118 empty seats on federal benches. There's one judicial vacancy in Florida's middle district, which includes Orlando. Vacancies increase the back-breaking workload of cases that judges preside over. That workload can contribute to delays throughout the court system. It's not uncommon for individual judges to preside over hundreds of complicated cases during the course of a year.

The situation has become so critical that U.S. Chief Justice William Rehnquist issued a Mayday call for help last week in his annual report on the federal judiciary. He noted that the delays and arduous confirmation process is discouraging some qualified people from accepting a nomination to the federal bench.

The solution rests in the hands of the Senate, which is charged with confirming judicial nominees. Those nominations sometimes become political soccer balls. When the Republicans held the majority during the Democratic administration of President Bill Clinton, his nominations had a difficult time making it through the confirmation process.

Now that the Democrats hold the upper hand in the Senate, nominations made by Mr. Bush, a Republican, are crawling. When the Senate adjourned for the Christmas break, 37 nominees were awaiting action by the Senate.

The prompt and smooth administration of justice in the federal system is much more important than partisan muscle-flexing.

All presidents are entitled to nominate judges with whom they are politically comfortable. That discretion generally should be respected by senators.

The way to avoid logjams in the nomination process is for senators to avoid getting hung up on political differences they may have with individual nominees.

The candidates' fitness to serve in the lifetime judicial positions should be evaluated on the basis of the nominee's integrity, personal background, professional experience, legal knowledge and temperament.

Presidents also have an obligation to avoid nominating people who have weak qualifications for the post. Such nominations are needlessly provocative. They are certain to draw political attacks and cause delays in the confirmation process.

The ongoing international war against terrorism and increasingly complex issues in technology and the business world are sure to create cases that will make the federal courts more important than ever.

Filling the vacancies on the federal bench must be a top priority for senators.

Order for the Courts

The News and Observer
Saturday, January 5, 2002

Anyone watching the bitter nomination and appointment process for federal judgeships has to come away perplexed. Democrats like to point out that President Bush has gotten a higher percentage of his judicial nominees through the Senate grinder at this time than former President Clinton.

But that partisan point, legitimate though it may be, doesn't erase the fact that the federal court system is understaffed on the bench. Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, in his annual report on the courts at the end of 2001, noted that of 853 federal judgeships, 94 are vacant, about 11 percent. That's not as bad as the Clinton years -- when Republicans also dragged their feet on appointments thanks to their ongoing contentious relationship with Clinton -- but it's too many -- the most at the start of a year since 1994.

Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, chairman of the Judiciary Committee that opens the approval process, blames the tumult in the nation and the Senate, with some justification.

Besides Sept. 11, senators suffered through the emptying of Senate offices due to anthrax and political upheaval with a change in leadership after Sen. James Jeffords of Vermont became an independent and gave the majority to Democrats at mid year.

President Bush, of course, should expect opposition if he goes to the fringes of conservatism to find nominees. Judgeships, after all, are lifetime appointments. Democrats wouldn't be doing their job if they didn't subject nominees to rigorous debate, a logic that holds when Republicans are the Senate bosses. Federal judges have tremendous power, and those who are granted it must be men and women of sound judgment and reason, qualities than need not have a partisan litmus test.

Bush does have every right to fill judgeships with candidates who share his conservative philosophy.

A well-functioning judiciary is always important. But the war against terrorism has raised a host of basic constitutional issues that the courts likely will have to untangle in the months and years to come.

Now more than ever, Rehnquist seems to say, we need a strong, complete federal judiciary. Seeing to that and making sure the process doesn't get skewed by partisanship is a duty shared equally by the president and Congress.

Reluctant Jurists; Problems with Pay and Confirmation Dampen Top Lawyers' Aspirations to be Federal Judges

Newsday

Saturday, January 5, 2002

Relatively low pay and lengthy confirmation processes have soured many lawyers in private practice on seeking appointment to the federal bench, says the nation's top judge. The Senate and the president should heed the warning of Chief Justice William Rehnquist.

If the pool of potential judicial nominees continues to shrink, the current high quality of the federal bench will eventually be eroded. In the interest of justice, Washington should deliver timely confirmation hearings and votes, and a formula for regular judicial pay raises. Highly qualified nominees who are comfortably in the mainstream of political ideology usually win easy confirmation. It is when a president from one party asks a Senate controlled by the other party to confirm nominees with controversial views that the process runs aground.

A Democratic Senate, its plate full after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, confirmed 28 of Republican President George W. Bush's judicial nominees in 2001. But at year's end there were still 94 vacancies. Between 1998 and 2000, with Democrat Bill Clinton in the White House and a Republican Senate, 32 nominees got no confirmation hearings at all.

Presidents impede the process when they try to stack the courts with ideologues. But the acceptable political mainstream must be broad. The courts benefit from ideological diversity and from the presence of judges who follow a variety of career paths to the bench.

Nominees in private practice are the ones most affected by delayed confirmation and lower pay. They lose business while awaiting confirmation because they cannot assure prospective clients that they'll be available to complete their work. And for top lawyers, judicial salaries - $150,000 for district court judges, $192,000 for the chief justice - are a pay cut. Lawyers in the nation's top firms earn that much just a few years out of school. Government can't compete with private-sector compensation. But judges should get raises at regular intervals that exceed the rate of inflation.

Judges perform a demanding, critical public service. Those who do it shouldn't be expected to sacrifice unnecessarily.

Approval Process, Pay for Jurists Need Reform; Highly Political Vetting Process, Low Salaries Could Cripple Federal Judiciary

By Tom Teepen
Dayton Daily News
Friday, January 4, 2002

William H. Rehnquist has a point. Two, actually.

The Chief Justice of the United States, in his annual year-end report, warned that unless pay is boosted sharply and the political vetting of nominees is streamlined, the nation could wind up with a federal judiciary that is substantially bureaucratized and, virtually by definition then, dehumanized. With a scheduled 3.4 percent cost-of-living increase this year, district judges will make $150,000, courts of appeal judges $159,100 and Supreme Court associate justices $184,400. (Rehnquist will pull in $192,600.)

That's big money to most of us, and it would be easy to dismiss Rehnquist's pitch as the bellyaching of the well-to-do.

But, in fact, big law firms in major cities are paying salaries close to those of district judges to first-year lawyers, youths with law-review ink still on their fingers.

The public can expect federal judges to count the prestige of a judgeship and the opportunity to make an important civic contribution as at least some compensation for lower wages than they could make in private practice. It is unreasonable, however, to expect many of the most able candidates to accept what amounts to financial devastation.

As a result of the lagging pay, Rehnquist notes, an increasing number of federal jurists are coming from public rather than private practice - from prosecuting shops, public-defender programs and such - where the pay is so low $150,000 offers a lifestyle change.

Attorneys from private practice bring - not universally but typically - a greater real-world understanding of law to the judge's job than do public attorneys who have been practicing stickler's law at the second decimal place. The same can be said, by the way, of many political appointees. In any event, a mix on the federal bench is best.

Rehnquist is right, too, in saying the Senate approval process has become a political torture putting off potential nominees.

As he did in scolding GOP Congresses for sidelining President Bill Clinton's judicial nominees, the chief justice now chides the current Democratic Senate for holding up President George W. Bush's picks, but the larger blame has to go to Rehnquist's own party.

The Senate isn't breaking any speed records with Bush's choices, but neither is it as balky as recent Republican Congresses were. And where Clinton put forward essentially moderate nominees who should have been speedily approved, Bush has proposed a cohort that is one of the most ideologically vivid - lurid? - ever advanced. Careful, indeed skeptical, hearings are called for.

The GOP's right, in an avowed campaign to capture the federal bench, has extended its sly naming game to the judiciary - casting, and dismissing, as 'left-wing' or 'liberal' everyone who is not doctrinally conservative. (And the watchdog media, who bark their fool heads off when some second-tier pol empties the petty-cash drawer, lets the right get away with murdering whole political identities.)

The pay matter can be fixed quickly and cheaply with simple legislation, and should be. The confirmation mess won't end until both parties go back to making moderate appointments and the GOP stops being a willing partner in its right's scheming.

Bush Nominations Delayed

The Herald

Friday, January 4, 2002

The nation is ill served by senatorial foot-dragging in approving presidential nominations for various posts. But the delay is nothing new, and the GOP's self-righteous hand-wringing is more than a little hypocritical. Of the more than 500 executive branch positions that require Senate confirmation, about 350 were filled in 2001. But 70 nominees were left unconfirmed when Congress adjourned in late December.

Nominees were being rubber-stamped by the Republican-controlled Senate early in Bush's first year. But that came to a screeching halt when Vermont Sen. James Jeffords defected from the GOP, declaring himself an independent, thereby handing control of that body to the Democrats.

Some Republicans have advised Bush to use recess appointments while Congress is not in session, which would allow appointees to serve until January 2003 without Senate confirmation. But that tends to cast the nomination in a poor light, indicating the Senate has no confidence in the nominee. It also practically ensures the nominee never will be officially confirmed.

Senate Republicans have, predictably, complained about the delay. Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, senior Republican on the Judiciary Committee, said Democrats have made a "systematic and calculated effort to confirm the absolute minimum number of President Bush's judicial nominees

Hatch also asserted that his party "did not play such games when Bill Clinton was president." Oh, really? The record indicates otherwise. The Senate confirmed 28 judicial nominees last year. In 1996, when Hatch was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the Senate confirmed only 17.

In 1999, Hatch froze consideration of all nominees for several months to put pressure on Clinton to nominate an attorney Hatch wanted for a district judgeship in Utah. Under the past six years of Republican control of the Senate, confirmations, judicial nominations in particular, slowed to a crawl. Some nominees languished for years. In fact, some slots are open now because nominees weren't confirmed during the Clinton years. So, to some degree, the Democrats are demonstrating that both parties can play that game. Unfortunately, political games impede smoothly functioning government.

The Senate has a responsibility to advise and consent on presidential nominations. And, in some cases, delays may be justified. There are legitimate reasons to be wary of controversial nominations such as Otto Reich, Bush's nominee to be assistant secretary of state for Western Hemisphere affairs, and Eugene Scalia, son of Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia and Bush's pick to be the Labor Department's top lawyer.

Clearly, however, the process is flawed. Political spite is not a legitimate reason to hold up presidential nominations. Leaders in both parties need to seek common ground. Nonetheless, it's worth noting that Democrats didn't create this mess, and Republican complaints to the contrary are an attempt to rewrite recent history.

Senate Politics Damage Federal Courts

By Wes Haden
The Chattanooga Times
Friday, January 4, 2001

In the best tradition of blind justice -- that is a court system that does not take sides -- Chief Justice William Rehnquist once again has appealed to the U.S. Senate to put aside its seemingly endless bickering and attend to the business of approving new federal judges.

Though Justice Rehnquist's latest plea is pointedly directed to the sitting Democratic-controlled Senate, it is not a partisan request at all. The chief justice made the same request during the latter part of Bill Clinton's tenure when Republicans controlled the Senate and judicial appointments were, as they are now, caught up in endless political machinations. Justice Rehnquist has sound reason to push recalcitrant legislators. There are nearly 100 vacant federal judgeships around the country, slightly above 10 percent of the total. If federal courts are to provide prompt trials and efficient justice, as they are mandated to do, they must have a full complement of judges. Given the roadblocks put up in the fractious Senate over the past few years, that's unlikely to happen anytime soon.

Warning that the large number of vacancies "were undermining the administration of justice," the chief justice called on the Senate to "act with reasonable promptness" on the president's judicial nominees. The Senate, he correctly implied in his annual report on the federal judiciary, should put the nation's needs ahead of political chicanery.

In the past, pleas for assistance in matters of this kind from the judicial branch to the legislative branch have gone pretty much unheeded. The Senate did as it pleased -- and approved nominees only when it saw fit. That is no longer an acceptable way to conduct business.

Federal court dockets in many places are clogged because of past intransigence on the part of senators. Their persistent refusal to vote on judicial appointees whose ideologies differ with their party's orientation has created a problem that is fast becoming a national scandal.

To make matters worse, the new anti-terrorist laws enacted after Sept. 11 are already spawning litigation that will further tax the federal judicial system. Without the swift action sought by the chief justice, the situation is likely to worsen.

In recent years, the Senate, regardless of the majority party, has preferred to play partisan politics with judicial nominations rather than responsibly fill its role in approving judges for the trial and appellate courts.

It's time for those games to end. America and Americans are living in difficult times and it is more important than ever that the rule of law be paramount. The Senate can assure that it is by voting yea or nay on the judicial nominations when it returns to business on Jan. 23.

Rehnquist Decries Low Pay, Shrinking Pool of Judge Candidates

By Tony Mauro
Legal Times
Monday, January 7, 2002

The New Year's Day lament from Chief Justice William Rehnquist was familiar: Federal judges are not paid enough, and Congress needs to do something about it.

But in describing the negative impact of low judicial salaries, Rehnquist made a fresh and even surprising new argument. He claimed that the pay situation was shifting the pool of potential judges away from private practitioners and more toward bankruptcy judges, magistrates, state court judges and even prosecutors and public defenders -- for whom a district or appellate judgeship would represent a raise in pay.

And that, Rehnquist bemoaned, could turn the U.S. judiciary into a less-respected European-style civil bureaucracy, in which lawyers become lifelong judges at the start of their careers, unleavened by private law practice.

"We must not drastically shrink the number of judicial nominees who have had substantial experience in private practice," Rehnquist said in his annual year-end report on the judiciary. "We have never had, and should not want, a judiciary composed only of those who are already in the public service."

The argument turned heads, especially coming from a man who was himself an assistant attorney general in the Nixon administration before joining the federal bench as an associate justice in 1971. It also raised the question -- a question Rehnquist himself often asks a lawyer who makes a novel argument at the Supreme Court -- namely, what support is there for his proposition?

Rehnquist offered only nostalgia as evidence. He waxed poetic about judges and justices through history who had spent most or all of their professional lives in private practice. Rehnquist invoked the names of Louis Brandeis, known as the "people's attorney" before joining the high court in 1916, and Thurgood Marshall, who was a private lawyer and then top lawyer for the NAACP before John F. Kennedy named him to the federal appeals bench. Learned Hand and Byron White were cited as well.

Even more powerfully, Rehnquist also said that John Brown, Richard Rives, Elbert Tuttle, and John Minor Wisdom, "well-known for their courage in enforcing this court's civil rights decisions as judges on the Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, all served almost exclusively in private practice before their appointments to the bench."

DOES MONEY MATTER?

Beyond Rehnquist's cavalcade of judicial titans who once hung out a shingle, there does appear to be some statistical evidence backing up his claim. But some judges and academics contacted after Rehnquist's report suggested that the trend is not as strong, lamentable, or salary-driven, as Rehnquist made it out to be.

"The observation may be true, but what difference does it make if we have a judiciary full of lower court judges?" says Washington University political science professor Lee Epstein, a longtime student of the federal judicial system. "I'd want to know more before saying it's a bad thing."

A. Thomas Small, a bankruptcy judge in North Carolina and former president of the Conference of Bankruptcy Judges, has no doubt on that question. "Experience as a bankruptcy judge is a good thing, and I am sure the chief justice appreciates that. But I would agree with him that you don't want to limit the field of nominees just to bankruptcy or magistrate judges."

Sam Joyner, an Oklahoma magistrate judge who also edits the Federal Courts Law Review, adds: "The chief justice is right that the best way to go is for those in private practice to join the judiciary. But a lot of magistrate judges have that experience, plus they have a track record [as judges] that's pretty helpful." Joyner himself was in private practice for 30 years before becoming a magistrate judge in 1995.

The salary of magistrate and bankruptcy judges is set at 92 percent of district judges' salary, which was recently boosted to $150,000. Thanks to a 3.4 percent cost-of-living adjustment for all Article III judges, an increase that Rehnquist expressed appreciation for in his report, appeals court judges are now paid $159,100, associate Supreme Court justices get $184,400, and the chief justice is paid $192,600.

Joyner, who sits in Tulsa, just lost two fellow magistrate judges -- Claire Eagan and James Payne -- to the district court bench in Oklahoma, so he has seen firsthand the trend that Rehnquist spotlighted.

Eagan and Payne are among the 64 people nominated to district or circuit judgeships so far by President George W. Bush. Of those 64, nearly half -- 31, to be exact -- were sitting state or federal judges or magistrate judges when nominated. Six more were in state or federal legal jobs, and five were academics or self-employed. Only 22 were partners in private law firms when nominated.

The Bush record is in line with a trend that Sheldon Goldman has seen over many decades.

Goldman, a political science professor at the University of Massachusetts, is the author of "Picking Federal Judges" and is generally regarded as the most reliable keeper of statistics about federal court nominees.

Sixty years ago, Goldman says, about one-third of district court appointees were drawn from the ranks of lower court and state court judges. In recent years, that number has grown to nearly one-half.

"There has been a long-term trend toward a professionalization of the judiciary," says Goldman. But he suggests that the trend has been driven as much by other factors as by salary.

For one thing, incumbent judges and government lawyers have a track record on issues that might be important to the appointing president. For another, they may have already been through the confirmation process -- though, as Goldman notes, that did not help Robert Bork or Clarence Thomas much when they were nominated to the Supreme Court.

The statistics about the jobs that judges held when nominated also obscure the fact that most judges, magistrates, and government attorneys had considerable private practice experience earlier in their careers. Rehnquist, for example, practiced law for 16 years in Phoenix before joining the Justice Department. Bankruptcy and magistrate judges, appointed by district or circuit judges, are required to have practiced law before seeking the jobs.

EUROPE'S WAY

The European experience that Rehnquist offered as an unenviable contrast is far different. Judges are more like lifelong bureaucrats in many European nations, says American University law professor Herman Schwartz, who has studied several judicial systems abroad.

"They cover their asses, they are tightly controlled by appeals courts, and they are low-status and low-income," says Schwartz. "Here, people snap to attention when a federal judge walks into the room."

So how much of a factor is low salary in the judicial selection process? Bush administration officials would not comment publicly on that question or on Rehnquist's thesis. But one top official, when asked how often prospective nominees drop out because of money, says, "It has happened on occasion, but is not frequent."

The American Bar Association and the Federal Bar Association last year issued a report

supporting the chief justice's plea for higher judicial pay, asserting that salary was "the single most important factor discouraging potential candidates from seeking appointment," although it offered only anecdotal evidence.

Goldman says one piece of tangible evidence that salary is an issue is that those nominated to the federal bench tend to be wealthier than in decades past -- and presumably better able to handle a dip in pay. Roughly 40 percent of Clinton appointees to the federal bench reported net worth of $1 million or more, Goldman calculates. In his 2000 year-end report issued last January, Rehnquist said, "We cannot afford a judiciary made up primarily of the wealthy."

A. Raymond Randolph, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, says a related tax issue also works as a disincentive for potential nominees.

"Congress needs to look into the problems caused by the transition that some people face when going from private practice to a judgeship," Randolph says. "Often, in order to avoid frequent recusals, a new judge has to convert his or her investments from stocks into mutual funds. They have to take this big hit in capital gains taxes when they do this. Congress should look into granting an exemption in this circumstance."

Those who minimize the salary issue say the honor of a presidential appointment and the prestige of the federal bench -- complete with life tenure, law clerks, and other perks -- still lure top candidates from the private bar.

The story is often told of the lighthearted but revealing exchange of letters nearly two years ago between 4th Circuit Judge J. Michael Luttig and John Roberts Jr., partner at Washington, D.C.'s Hogan & Hartson. Hearing that first-year associate salaries were approaching those of federal judges, Luttig "applied" for a first-year position at Hogan.

Roberts, who is now a Bush appointee to the appeals bench, whimsically turned Luttig down. "First, our associates are expected to work more than one week each month, and we do not give them the entire summer off," Roberts wrote. "Second, while it is always a possibility, we do not guarantee our associates life tenure. Third, while we offer a wide range of support, few of our associates are assigned three full-time law clerks to assist them. And finally, although we have adopted a 'casual Friday' policy, black robes do not qualify as appropriate attire."

Hispanic Nominee No Shoo-In; Estrada's Critics Say He's and Ideologue Unfit for Powerful Bench

By Frank Davies
The Charlotte Observer
Sunday, January 6, 2002

To the Bush administration, Miguel Estrada's nomination for a top federal judgeship is a brilliant opportunity. It combines impressive legal credentials, an immigrant success story and a chance to woo Hispanic voters.

Critics, however, view Estrada, a Honduran American who lacks judicial experience, as a Justice Clarence Thomas in the making - a young lawyer thrust toward the Supreme Court as a conservative ideologue, no more representative of Hispanics than Thomas was of blacks. It means the Estrada nomination to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals - the nation's second most powerful court - looms as one of this year's most politically charged nomination struggles in the Senate.

Estrada left Honduras at 17, joined his mother in New York, learned English in two years, graduated with honors from Harvard Law School, clerked for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, served as a prosecutor, and worked in the Justice Department for both the Clinton and first Bush administrations.

Now in private practice in Washington, Estrada, 40, is a favorite of conservatives.

He worked for GOP legal strategist Theodore Olson, now solicitor general, and has been a member of the Federalist Society, a right-of-center legal network influential in the current Bush administration.

Leaders of several Hispanic advocacy groups support him.

But a Clinton administration appointee who supervised some of Estrada's work in the Justice Department voiced reservations about him.

"Miguel is too much of an ideologue to be an appellate judge - you could not count on him to be fair or neutral," said Paul Bender, former deputy solicitor general.

With Congress returning Jan. 23, Republicans and conservative groups are pressing the Senate to act. Democrats who remember how the GOP held up one Hispanic judicial nominee, Richard Paez of California, for four years are in no hurry.

"This is a fight where Bush will see a real upside to push for Estrada, but Democratic senators are in no rush - they have long memories," said Michael Gerhardt, author of a recent book on presidential appointments.

Collins Accuses Democrats of Stall Tactics

By George Edmonson
The Atlanta Journal and Constitution
Sunday, January 6, 2002

Rep. Mac Collins (R-Ga.) last week renewed his accusation that Senate Democratic leaders are intentionally delaying President Bush's judicial nominations for political reasons.

Collins said that Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) and Judiciary Committee Chairman

Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) have been using the process to give Democrats an issue in this year's midterm congressional elections and in the 2004 presidential race.

"Daschle and Leahy are trying to obstruct the president's appointments so that they can show, in some warped twist of logic, that the president has not been an effective leader," Collins said in a statement.

"Daschle has one aim in the process, to lay the groundwork for his 2004 presidential bid and to show ineffective leadership by the Republican Party to increase the Democrats' margin of control in the Senate and to take control of the House," Collins said. "This is unconscionable and endangers our nation." Last year, the congressman accused Sen. Max Cleland (D-Ga.) of helping to delay nominations for political reasons. Cleland said he was only following the procedure the GOP under President Clinton.

But in his latest press release, Collins said Cleland had been responsive in helping to get two vacancies filled in the Middle Georgia district

Collins' statement said, in part, "I appreciate Senator Cleland's responsiveness to my request that he go to bat for the citizens of Georgia."

The Democrats, of course, deny any political skullduggery and, at the same time, say that the Republicans delayed or tried to delay judicial appointments during the Clinton administration.

Defense Lawyers Oppose Cassell Nomination

By Stephen Hunt
The Salt Lake Tribune
Saturday, January 5, 2002

Utah defense attorneys are publicly opposing Paul Cassell's nomination by President Bush to become the state's newest federal judge -- claiming he lacks the proper temperament to sit on the bench.

Cassell, a University of Utah law professor, is an outspoken champion of crime-victim rights, a death-penalty proponent and recently tried to abolish the long-standing rule that forces police to give crime suspects a so-called "Miranda warning" prior to interrogation. Susanne Gustin, president of the Utah Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, claims Cassell's "habit of inserting himself into high-profile cases" makes him unfit to be a judge.

"We question his ability to provide a fair hearing," Gustin said Friday, the same day her Letter to the Editor about Cassell was published in The Tribune. "He's too much of an advocate and a judge has to be totally in the middle."

Gustin said she also planned to write the Senate Judiciary Committee, which must approve Cassell's nomination.

Most recently, Cassell was involved in the Robert Weitzel homicide case, representing the victims' families in their desire to have 2nd District Judge Thomas Kay removed from Weitzel's second trial. Family members and prosecutors accused Kay of bias against them.

Kay was removed for "apparent bias." But the judge who ordered Kay's recusal said he had "serious questions concerning the good faith" of Cassell and state prosecutors.

Despite similar objections by others, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, remains supportive of Cassell, said Hatch's press secretary, Heather Barney.

Parties Locked in Battle Over Hispanic's Bid for Court Seat

By Frank Davies

The Miami Herald

Monday, January 7, 2002

For the Bush administration, the nomination of Miguel Estrada to a top federal judgeship seemed like a sure winner. He possesses impressive legal credentials, his life story offers a dramatic example of success by an immigrant, and Hispanic voters would be favorably impressed by the GOP's selection.

But his nomination has languished in the Senate for months, and as more and more critics voice doubts, the fight to put Estrada on the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia -- the nation's second most powerful court -- is shaping up as one of this year's most contentious, politically charged struggles in the Senate.

The controversy reflects the importance of the Hispanic vote and the politics of payback, not to mention an ideological battle to define the middle ground of jurisprudence.

Opponents portray Estrada, a Honduran American who lacks judicial experience, as a Clarence Thomas in the making, a young lawyer thrust toward the Supreme Court as a conservative ideologue no more representative of Hispanics than Thomas was of blacks.

A former colleague who supervised some of Estrada's work in the Justice Department said he was "shocked" by Estrada's nomination.

"Miguel is too much of an ideologue to be an appellate judge -- you could not count on him to be fair or neutral," said Paul Bender, who was deputy solicitor general. "He is a terrific oral advocate, but I could not rely on his written work as a neutral statement of the law."

Estrada, like other judicial nominees, declined to discuss his career until a hearing on his nomination is held.

PRESSURE FOR ACTION

With Congress returning Jan. 23, Republicans in Congress and conservative groups are pushing for the Senate to act. Democrats who remember how the GOP held up one Hispanic nominee for a judgeship, Richard Paez of California, for four years are in no hurry.

“This is a fight where Bush will see a real upside to push for Estrada, but Democratic senators are in no rush -- they have long memories of how Republicans blocked Clinton's nominees,” said law professor Michael Gerhardt.

“This nomination shows that ideology does matter, and Estrada's Hispanic background adds an important element and will make a big difference,” said Gerhardt at The College of William & Mary.

But even those who don't like Estrada's politics or his fitness for the job concede that his life story is compelling.

He left Honduras at 17, joined his mother in New York, learned English in two years, achieved magna cum laude honors at Harvard Law School, clerked for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, served as a prosecutor, and worked in the Justice Department during the Clinton administration and the first Bush administration.

RIGHT OF CENTER

Now in private practice in Washington, Estrada, 40, is a favorite of conservatives. He worked for GOP legal strategist Theodore Olson, now solicitor general, and has been a member of the Federalist Society, a right-of-center legal network influential in the current Bush administration.

“His life story makes liberals swoon, but his politics make them shudder,” wrote New Republic editor Peter Beinart, who said President Bush is using “diversity games” to disguise a far-right nominee.

Estrada, who opposes abortion and has criticized some affirmative action measures, was hailed as a “star of the conservative legal movement” by William Buckley's National Review. Columnist Robert Novak described Estrada as part of “an all-star conservative team of lawyers.”

MINORITY HIRING

Estrada was one of the few minority group members to be hired as a law clerk by a Supreme Court justice, an issue that has prompted protests by several legal groups. When USA Today in 1998 reported on the very low percentage of minority clerks, Estrada dismissed the statistics.

“If there was some reason for under-representation, it would be something to look into,” Estrada told USA Today. “But I don't have any reason to think it's anything other than a reflection of trends in society.”

They are not a 527. I think we looked into them once before for Adam Goldman's trip to Philly in October. The issue then was whether their 501(c)(4) or their PAC was paying. The 501(c)(4) paid for Adam's trip.

The Republican Jewish Coalition has a PAC registered with the FEC (I believe that if you are required to register with and report all of your activity to the FEC, you do not have to file any additional 527 paperwork with the IRS).

Bob or Zal - do you have any background on these quotes??

CNN's Zahn: "An explosive new book published in France alleges that the United States was in negotiations to do a deal with the Taliban for an oil pipeline in Afghanistan ... If these charges are true, this is really big news" ("American Morning," CNN, 1/8).

Ex-U.N. Weapons Inspector Richard Butler : "The most explosive charge is that the Bush administration, just shortly after assuming office, slowed down FBI investigations of al Qaeda and terrorism in Afghanistan in order to do a deal with the Taliban on oil; an oil pipeline across Afghanistan" ("American Morning," CNN, 1/8).

Okay, I'm back to the Republican Jewish Coalition request for Ari. I spoke with them this morning to find out specifically what they want. They want Ari to come down on Friday evening or Saturday to Palm Beach, Florida. On Saturday night they would have a small private high dollar fundraising dinner (with 15-20 couples) with Ari. (They are a 501(c)(4) non-profit organization.) On Sunday they would have two large events w/Ari to help raise membership and get the President's agenda out. Each of these events would have about 250 people in attendance. Are any of the above events a problem?

Also, they are offering travel in a privately owned plane (not a corporate plane). Can Ari do this or must he fly commercial?

Brett,

David has just sent to me a copy of a letter dated December 27 from Walker to Rumsfeld enclosing draft agency protocols which are intended to govern the GAO's work with the agencies. I agree with David's initial impression that this cries out for a coordinated response. Please discuss this with Judge Gonzales with a view towards (1) contacting the general counsels to see whether they have received copies of the GAO draft and (2) coordinating a response. We should also get a copy to OLC and get their views ASAP.

Tim

Judge and Tim: Carl Cannon (president of writers association) was in my meeting with historians. He is writing story for National Journal. He wants to describe the meeting and use the quote below from me from the meeting. Anne was ok with it. I am unsure whether it is good that I be identified publicly, although the horse is unfortunately well out of the barn on that. The quote itself is good, I guess. We could try to have me identified as a "White House lawyer." Let me know.

Brett,

David has just sent to me a copy of a letter dated December 27 from Walker to Rumsfeld enclosing draft agency protocols which are intended to govern the GAO's work with the agencies. I agree with David's initial impression that this cries out for a coordinated response. Please discuss this with Judge Gonzales with a view towards (1) contacting the general counsels to see whether they have received copies of the GAO draft and (2) coordinating a response. We should also get a copy to OLC and get their views ASAP.

Along with Noel, I vote for 11:30am. It will take a while to get there, be seated, order, etc., with this large a group, and I worry that if we go at 1pm it is just going to go too late into the afternoon. Otherwise, we could try and think of another place.

This one falls btwn the cracks: a friend of mine in KS has a very troubling immigration problem. They need to apply for political asylum and are pursuing this course in KS. The local Congressman wants to write the AG about the matter and they have asked me to call over there to Ayers/Israelite and see if there is anything they can within the confines of legal protocol.

Is there a problem with me asking them to look into this sad ordeal?

My view is that the WH should not be getting involved in this kind of thing. Such involvement would go against the contacts policy which is discourages interference with agencies in individual cases. It may be the proper province of members of congress to contact agencies on behalf of constituents; maybe the member has already done that. It is negative to the story that the person concerned is a friend of yours.

I did do one of these incumbent access requests in conjunction with tobacco. There's really no magic to them, and I don't have any thoughts other than to change the "woulds" to "wills." Has Gary Stern reviewed this? He's the expert on this and will know whether either as a matter of procedure or legal requirement there's anything else or anything different needed. Mine isn't a great template, because we had a complex open-file discovery arrangement that allowed access to lawyers for private litigants subject to post-hoc clawbacks.

Attached is a draft of a request to NARA for the Clinton presidential records we discussed this morning.
The last paragraph is meant to track the requirements of 44 USC 2205(2)(B).

Brad -- Paul thought you had done one of these in conjunction with the tobacco litigation. Any suggestions?

Dear Mr. Stern:

Pursuant to 44 U.S.C. § 2205(2)(B), I am writing to request access to the presidential records described below.

It is my understanding that the International Trade Commission, in conjunction with litigation in Nippon Steel v. United States (CIT No. 01-00103), requested that National Archives and Records Administration staff conduct a search of President Clinton's presidential records to locate documents responsive to plaintiffs' discovery requests in that case. I also understand that your staff identified 21 pages of potentially responsive material and provided three of those pages to the ITC.

I request that the National Archives and Records Administration provide the White House with access to the 18 pages identified by your staff but not provided to the ITC. Upon receipt of those documents, we would review them for privilege and would provide non-privileged documents to the ITC for potential use in the litigation.

Although we do not know the nature or contents of the requested documents, we believe that they are not otherwise available to the Administration. Moreover, they are needed for the conduct of current business of the executive branch.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

Brad: I like that: "post-hoc clawbacks."

Rachel: I'm attaching what I believe is the final of the first of two letters Brad sent to NARA on the tobacco matter. The second letter dealt with the complex open discovery procedure, but the first letter was a straightforward request letter, probably based on a sample or draft provided by NARA. It contains some good language. Also, you'll notice it was signed by Brad, not the Judge.

Do you guys have a database with the name and fax numbers of all these people? Is there someone (perhaps an intern) in leg affairs who can assist in the faxing of all of these members?

Please let me know.

Thanks!

Subject: Advice to Gary Edson re Contacts with Ex-Im Bank

Did one of you have a discussion with Gary Edson regarding his helping the ExIm Bank Vice Chairman to oversee the Bank while its Chairman is ill? Is ExIm covered by the contacts policy? OPIC is covered but ExIm is not on the list.

Brett,
Do you all have any regular talking points/stats you put together that summarize the status of judicial nominees? If so, would it be ok for Matt and I to receive these regularly? As follow-up, would it be ok to forward these talking points to Jennifer Oschal and Tony Feather who are helping to advocate for the President's nominees?
Thanks,
Doug

Harriet:

You may write a letter to Alfonso Jackson at HUD forwarding the package you received from Acting Mayor Poss. We recommend that you inform Mr. Jackson that you have received this package from Acting Mayor Poss, that it looks to be a serious and important project although you do not know the underlying merits of the loan application, and that you are forwarding it to him for HUD to take action it deems appropriate.

I have confirmed with the HUD general counsel's office that this kind of letter is perfectly appropriate in circumstances such as these with respect to Section 108 loan applications. Please let me know if you have additional questions.

not to be a broken record, but do you think there is any chance tim would ask jim at lunch to postpone the hearing on the 23rd for a week or so to see if we can work this out between now and then? a number of doj staffers think that is a very good idea, a hearing could exacerbate things. thanks.

not to be a broken record, but do you think there is any chance tim would ask jim at lunch to postpone the hearing on the 23rd for a week or so to see if we can work this out between now and then? a number of doj staffers think that is a very good idea, a hearing could exacerbate things. thanks.

Viet and Jen,

FYI: I just spoke with Paul Kamenar of the Washington Legal Foundation, and he told me that he's going to have an op-ed in this Monday's New York Times. It's about judges, and slams Leahy for the slow pace of confirmations. (Viet, you and I talked about the op-ed about three weeks ago, when it was being written.)

The Judge left town this afternoon and is not scheduled to return to DC until late Sunday.

He does have his blackberry if you need to get him message urgently. If it is something that will involve a lot of back and forth perhaps you can save the best for last and send him the short but sweet version w/ final recommendations/answers so he doesn't have dozens of lengthy emails re: one subject.

He has his cell also.

Thanks!

First, Kavanaugh is plainly conflicted here. Second, do I recall that, for that Mexican-related event, the RNC paid for it with Brett's approval? We should try to be consistent, in any event. And HHS? What's the connection there?

I assume this event is at the WH. Maybe if this is a joint WH - Irish American Association program, payment of some of the expenses could be by the outside organization on a co-sponsorship theory. I would not want to have the event look like it was entirely a WH sponsored event if the WH wasn't paying for it. Courtney, have you seen this kind of thing?

Subject: Irish question

Hi Brett --

We are trying to set up the Irish American reception event for St. Patrick's week.

My question for you is if it could be paid for by an outside group, like the Irish-American Republicans maybe?

I had thought about trying to have HHS pay for it, but Israel advised to ask you about an outside group instead.

Please let me know your thoughts.

Thanks, Meredith

Yes it is however the group will not be announced until Wed of next week!

The President is meeting with them on Thur of next week so we don't want to announce until the day before. I had planned to give you and Brett a heads up on Tuesday, didn't know you were going to get this draft announcement request. Call me tomorrow and we can discuss what we say when you or I or both of us make the call to Cooney on Tuesday.

Is the bioethics board the "Kass Commission" for which Dr. Cooney was a candidate? If so, where are you on disappointee calls? This is the one Brett and I would like to see go smoothly (as all of yours do!). Please advise as to status of disappointee call so I can weigh whether to call Manus Cooney. Thanks.

The Judge left town this afternoon and is not scheduled to return to DC until late Sunday.

He does have his blackberry if you need to get him message urgently. If it is something that will involve a lot of back and forth perhaps you can save the best for last and send him the short but sweet version w/ final recommendations/answers so he doesn't have dozens of lengthy emails re: one subject.

He has his cell also.

Thanks!

Reminder on emails: if he is bombarded w/ a bunch of cc's he is not likely that he will have time to go through them all. Send him only the groups final draft/comments for his review. It is possible that whatever documents (memos/letters) emailed to him may need to be faxed to him as well. This includes the Enron memo. When you guys are done with your back and forth send me via email the agreed upon draft and I'll fax it to him. If there are specific comments or items you have discussed that he needs to make the final call on we can add that to the fax.

The Judge just called. He has asked that the three of us spend a little time together discussing our operational strategy with respect to the Enron matter: what we should and shouldn't be doing going forward to maximize our effectiveness and give comfort to the staff that things are under control. After we've reached some decisions, he would like us to sit down with Tim and talk them over and then speak with him late this afternoon.

Are you guys available to talk right after the Jason lunch, around 1:00? Tim, would you be available to meet with the three of us right after our judicial interviews, around 3:00?

AGENCY FOIA REQUESTS

HHS

- The Physicians Committee for Responsible Medicine (PCRM) has filed a lawsuit for information about an experiment involving cats at Ohio State University (OSU) in Columbus. The research is funded by the NIH National Institute on Drug Abuse. PCRM's suit alleges NIH improperly withheld details of OSU veterinarian Michael Podell's work, aimed at developing an animal model for brain damage known to occur in humans who are both drug abusers and infected with the AIDS virus. The suit is being brought in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia
- ACF received the following requests:
Timothy J. Casey, of the NOW Legal Defense Fund, requested copies of documents in reference to comments received regarding the listening sessions on TANF reauthorization.

Gordy Holt, of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, requested copies of documents pertaining to all financial audit-reports involving Seattle's 1996 JOLI grant recipient, Black Dollar Days Task Force.

- HRSA received the following requests:

Twelve requests for samples of funded Community-Based Abstinence Education Planning or Implementation grant applications.

Riverfront Times, St. Louis, MO, requested the 1998, 1999, and 2000 audit reports for Grace Hill Neighborhood Health Centers, also located in St. Louis.

DOI

- Landmark Legal Foundation v. Department of the Interior. Landmark Legal Foundation mailed a FOIA request to the BLM on October 24, 2001. The BLM evidently never received the request due to the non-delivery of mail from the Brentwood Post Office after the anthrax incident. Landmark Legal Foundation served this suit on the Department on December 26, 2001, which is the first anyone at the Department or BLM had heard of the request. The BLM is beginning to process the request, which is for numerous documents pertaining to issuance or award of grants or contracts to non-profit organizations, from 1993 to the present. DOI is contacting the U.S. Attorney's Office to determine how to handle the case.

Reminder on emails: if he is bombarded w/ a bunch of cc's he is not likely that he will have time to go through them all. Send him only the groups final draft/comments for his review. It is possible that whatever documents (memos/letters) emailed to him may need to be faxed to him as well. This includes the Enron memo. When you guys are done with your back and forth send me via email the agreed upon draft and I'll fax it to him. If there are specific comments or items you have discussed that he needs to make the final call on we can add that to the fax.

We can do this by conference call using our phones' existing capacities (w/o using call-in numbers). Paul and I are available at 10 or at any other time that may suit you. Please confirm what time you want to confer.

Can we meet Friday at 10 at EEOB 156 to discuss this? Or we could do
a conference call with call-in numbers (that is, without speaker phones) to save you all the trip. Let me know.

We can do this by conference call using our phones' existing capacities (w/o using call-in numbers). Paul and I are available at 10 or at any other time that may suit you. Please confirm what time you want to confer.

Can we meet Friday at 10 at EEOB 156 to discuss this? Or we could do
a conference call with call-in numbers (that is, without speaker phones) to save you all the trip. Let me know.

Subject: Strategy session

The Judge just called. He has asked that the three of us spend a little time together discussing our operational strategy with respect to the Enron matter: what we should and shouldn't be doing going forward to maximize our effectiveness and give comfort to the staff that things are under control. After we've reached some decisions, he would like us to sit down with Tim and talk them over and then speak with him late this afternoon.

Are you guys available to talk right after the Jason lunch, around 1:00? Tim, would you be available to meet with the three of us right after our judicial interviews, around 3:00?

Subject: Terrorism Insurance Meeting

Marc Sumerlin would like to have a terrorism insurance meeting on Wednesday, 1/16.

The agenda will be: is there still a need for a Federal role in terrorism insurance?

Please let me know if 2:30 works for you. If it does not, please indicate what times you are available.

Thanks,
Leslie

Hicks Sworn in Judge

By Ed Vogel
Las Vegas-Review Journal
Friday, January 11, 2002

Longtime Reno lawyer Larry R. Hicks, 57, formally was sworn in Thursday as Nevada's sixth and newest U.S. District Court judge.

At an investiture ceremony attended by more than 300 people, Hicks joked about how long it took him to win the federal judgeship. 'If you think this is going on too long,' said Hicks during the 90-minute ceremony, 'then consider we have been waiting 9 ½ years for it.' He originally had been nominated for a federal judgeship by then Rep. Barbara Vucanovich, R-Nev., in 1992.

But that was a presidential election year, and the Senate never confirmed his nomination. President Clinton won the election that year and Hicks' nomination lapsed.

Then in August, Hicks was nominated for a federal judgeship by Sen. John Ensign, R-Nev. He was confirmed by the Senate on Nov. 5 on an 83-0 vote.

As a federal judge, Hicks will be based in Las Vegas, although he will occasionally hear cases in Reno, where he has lived since 1957. His parents, now deceased, operated the Holiday Hotel in downtown Reno. Hicks will be paid $145,100 a year during the lifetime appointment. Clark County District Judge James Mahan also was nominated for a federal judgeship by Ensign.

Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., said during the investiture ceremony that he expects Mahan will be confirmed in a few weeks.

'I will do everything I can to do this job as well and as honestly as possible and with as much integrity as I can,' Hicks said after receiving the black robes of a federal judge.

Speakers called Hicks a man whose character is above reproach.

'As a lawyer, he exuded the term 'gentleman,' ' said Nevada Supreme Court Chief Justice Bill Maupin.

Fellow U.S. District Judge David Hagen remarked on how gracious Hicks was after Hagen was nominated for the post in 1993.

Although Hagen took the judgeship for which Hicks originally had been nominated, Hagen said he sent him federal judge application forms, a step that gave him a three-month head start on winning confirmation.

'Larry Hicks is truly a gentleman,' Hagen said.

Hicks became a lawyer in 1968. One of his first jobs was as a prosecutor in the office of then Washoe County District Attorney Bill Raggio, now the state Senate majority leader.

'If I remember, he never lost a case,' Raggio said. 'Of course, no lawyer remembers losing a case.'

Later Hicks won a four-year term as district attorney. Since 1979 he has been a lawyer and partner with the statewide firm of McDonald, Carano, Wilson, McCune, Bergin, Frankovich & Hicks.

He handled murder cases as district attorney, but Hicks largely has handled civil cases as a private lawyer. He represented Dow Chemical in a celebrated breast implant case.

Ensign said he knew Hicks less than any person in the office and relied on a nonpartisan process to pick the best qualified lawyers for judgeships.

'This corrects an injustice of 10 years ago,' Ensign said.

In Harmony With the Supremes

By Al Kamen

The Washington Post

Monday, January 14, 2002

Last week was a pretty good one for Washington attorney John G. Roberts Jr., Bush's nominee for a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals here. No, neither he nor fellow D.C. federal appeals court nominee Miguel A. Estrada got a green light from the Senate Judiciary Committee for a hearing on their nominations pending since spring.

But Roberts, a former deputy solicitor general, did win a big Supreme Court ruling for Toyota that reduced the scope of the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Working to undercut workers' rights likely won't win organized labor votes, but the fact that it was a 9 to 0 ruling written by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor may take out some of the sting.

Much more helpfully, Roberts, a former clerk for Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, last week argued a high court case for the enviros. The case pitted homeowners and developers against Lake Tahoe planning authorities, who wanted to put a moratorium on development in the lake area.

The usual suspects took up sides: the property rights folks, the National Association of Home Builders, the American Farm Bureau, the Pacific Legal Foundation and the Washington Legal Foundation against the moratorium; the National Audubon Society, the Natural Resources Defense Council, the National Wildlife Federation and the Sierra Club for the halt to development. Roberts was joined by Solicitor General Theodore B. Olson in arguing for the moratorium.

But Roberts, according to those present, missed a key opportunity: He failed to point out the similarities between Lake Tahoe and the even more beautiful, more spectacular, Lake Champlain, conveniently located in Vermont, home of Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D).

Meanwhile, wags have taken to calling Estrada the "Sonia Sotomayor of his generation," reminding people of the GOP-controlled Senate's stall of then-President Bill Clinton's nomination of federal Judge Sonia Sotomayor to an appeals court.

Republicans feared the Hispanic Sotomayor would then be on a fast-track to the Supremes. Now some Democrats worry about putting the staunchly conservative Estrada, also Hispanic, on to a similar launching court.

Senate Stonewalling; Lawmakers Delaying Judicial Confirmations

By Thomas Jipping

The Washington Times

Monday, January 14, 2002

Unprecedented partisanship drove the Senate's judicial confirmation process last year. Things can go better this year if only Democrats would follow their own standards.

A composite of the last three presidents' first year looks like this: nominations begin in July or August and the Senate confirms about 72 percent, in the first year. Instead, President Bush's first year looked like this: though nominations began in early May, and he made 67 percent more nominations than his predecessors' average, the Senate confirmed just 42 percent in the first year. Despite receiving 53 nominations before September 11, the Senate did not even keep up with judicial attrition; vacancies jumped from 82 on inauguration day to 94 by adjournment day. Eight of the first 11 nominees, named on May 9, have to this day not even received a Judiciary Committee hearing. Deliberate partisanship is the only explanation for this performance. Things need not be this way this year. First, Democrats say the benchmark should be their confirmation performance when running the Senate during President Clinton's first term. In 1994, Mr. Clinton's second year, the Senate Judiciary Committee held 25 confirmation hearings and the Senate confirmed 101 judicial nominees. The pace was so fast, confirmations topped the annual average from the Reagan-Bush years before the August recess. In just the three months leading up to the fall elections, the Senate approved 54 judges; October's tally of 28 is still a single-month record and equaled the previous year's total.

Democrats insisted 1994 was the benchmark long after Republicans captured the Senate. On March 16, 1998, Sen. Patrick Leahy said: "Unfortunately, over the last three years, the Senate has barely matched the one-year total of judges confirmed in 1994." On July 7, 1998, he compared that year's confirmation progress "to our total of judges confirmed in 1994." On April 14, 1999, Mr. Leahy said: "Look at how we have done in the past. Let's go a little backward. In 1994, we confirmed 101." On both Nov. 19, 1999, and Feb. 10, 2000, he used the same language: "In 1994, with a Democratic majority in the Senate, we confirmed 101 judges."

Second, Democrats have demanded that the Senate vote on nominations soon after the president makes them. On July 25, 2000, Sen. Leahy said: "The soon-to-be presidential nominee of the Republican Party has said - and I agree with him - that . . . the Senate ought to vote these people up or down in 60 days . . . One of the things that most Republicans and Democrats ought to be able to agree on is what Governor Bush said: Do it and vote them up or down in 60 days."

Gov. Bush, of course, is now President Bush. Democrats will say this 60-day standard assumed the liberal American Bar Association would evaluate and rate candidates prior to nomination. Since they now do so after nomination, toss in another 30 days - longer than the three weeks the ABA said last year its work should take. The Senate adjourned last year abandoning at least two dozen nominees already past this 90-day limit.

Third, Democrats have demanded that all nominees be confirmed before finally adjourning a two-year Congressional session. Mr. Leahy reminded the majority Republicans of this on Oct. 14, 1998, shortly before the 105th Congress adjourned: "The Democratic Senate majority in the two Congresses of the Bush Administration ended both those Congresses, the 101st and 102nd, without a single judicial nomination on the calendar." One week later, the Senate confirmed 17 judicial nominees in a single group by unanimous consent minutes before adjournment.

Democrats have often cited Chief Justice William Rehnquist's warnings about slow confirmations and high vacancies. In his 1997 annual report, the chief wrote that "vacancies cannot remain at such high levels indefinitely without eroding the quality of justice." Mr. Clinton himself quoted the Rehnquist report in his 1998 State of the Union Address, as have Senate Democrats dozens of times since.

Chief Justice Rehnquist's new report on 2001 repeats the same warning. He wrote: "When I spoke to this issue in 1997, there were 82 judicial vacancies; when the Senate adjourned on December 20th there were 94 vacancies." The situation is even worse than when Democrat said the Senate should heed such warnings.

On July 17, 1998, Mr. Leahy said that filling judicial vacancies "is a constitutional duty that the Senate - and all of its members - are obligated to fulfill." Indeed it is. If only Democrats would follow their own standards in fulfilling that constitutional duty, this will be a very busy year.

Passing Muster

By Jim Hunt

The Orlando Sentinel

Saturday, January 12, 2001

Your Jan. 6 editorial about the pace of judicial nominations erred terribly in the assertion that presidents are entitled to nominate whomever they choose, as long as they're qualified, and that the Senate should respect his choices. Nothing in the Constitution supports your position, which does violence to the very separation of powers upon which this document is based. That politics has been off-limits while the Senate provides its advice and consent to the president has led to the unpleasant situation in which any character flaw of a nominee, no matter how minor or how long ago, must be ferreted out, but "politics" cannot be debated.

The nomination process would be more effective if the Senate were truly to exercise its advice and consent: approving nominations when the nominees are deemed acceptable, and denying them without trepidation when they are not. All presidents are politicians, and this one, like his predecessor, knows the type of nominee who will pass muster. It is time that presidents started offering realistic nominees instead of complaining about foot-dragging in the Senate.

The Senate's Abdication

The Chicago Tribune

Friday, January 11, 2001

Back in 1997, Chief Justice William Rehnquist complained about the Senate's habit of delaying votes on presidential appointments to the federal bench. "The president should nominate candidates with reasonable promptness," he declared, "and the Senate should act within a reasonable time to confirm or reject them."

That was back in the days when we had a Democratic president and Republican-dominated Senate. But things have changed. Today, we have a Republican president, and Democrats control the Senate. The problem that Rehnquist described has changed as well: It's worse. As Rehnquist notes in his annual report on the state of the federal judiciary, there were 82 judicial vacancies when he complained in 1997. At last count, there are now 97. In 1997, the Senate confirmed only 36 judges--down from 101 in 1994. Last year, it confirmed just 28. That leaves the judiciary well short of fully staffed, which translates into overloaded dockets, long trial delays and added burdens for current judges.

Why are things moving so slowly? The same reason they moved slowly during the Clinton presidency--because the Senate, for one reason or another, refuses to take action on judicial nominations. President Bush moved quickly to fill vacancies, naming 80 judges in his first year. But many of them have yet to get a vote even in the Judiciary Committee. Some highly qualified nominees, such as University of Utah law professor Michael McConnell and longtime Supreme Court litigator John Roberts, have been cooling their heels since May.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) insists he's doing the best he can. And it's true that the Senate has moved with impressive dispatch at times. District judges Roger Gregory and Barrington Parker Jr., picked for appellate spots, were both approved quickly. But Gregory and Parker are both African-Americans who were first named to the federal bench by President Clinton. McConnell and Roberts, by contrast, are white males with conservative reputations.

Some Democrats think people like this shouldn't be on the bench because they would be "hostile to the elderly, to minorities, and to choice" on abortion, in the words of Nan Aron of the liberal Alliance for Justice. But if Senate Democrats want to make ideology an issue, as Senate Republicans often did under Clinton, then they should debate what each nominee has said and written and then decide. Instead, the Senate is simply ignoring the nominations in the hope that they'll go away.

It's not only judicial appointments that have gotten this treatment. Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle has refused to allow a vote on the nomination of Eugene Scalia to be the top lawyer for the Labor Department--even though he has more than enough votes to be confirmed.

The Senate is under no obligation to accept every nomination the president sends to Capitol Hill, but it does have a duty to act promptly on each one. When the president makes major appointments, the Constitution says the Senate shall provide "advice and consent." It says nothing about stalling.

Subject: Terrorism Insurance Meeting

Marc Sumerlin would like to have a terrorism insurance meeting on Wednesday, 1/16.

The agenda will be: is there still a need for a Federal role in terrorism insurance?

Please let me know if 2:30 works for you. If it does not, please indicate what times you are available.

Thanks,
Leslie

Idahoans can smoke pot and drive
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO * Marijuana users can drive legally in Idaho as long as they don't drive erratically and can pass a field sobriety test, a federal appeals court ruled Monday.

While it is illegal to drive under the influence of alcohol or narcotics, Idaho law doesn't list marijuana as an narcotic, wrote the three-judge panel for the San Francisco-based 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The ruling overturned an impaired driving conviction against Matthew Patzer, 21, who was stopped for a broken tailgate light in 1998 and admitted to police he'd smoked marijuana at a party.

The appeals court said Patzer could not automatically be presumed impaired; he wasn't driving erratically and passed two field sobriety tests.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael J. Fica in Idaho said the government may ask the court to review its decision or request the U.S. Supreme Court hear the case.

Idahoans can smoke pot and drive

SAN FRANCISCO * Marijuana users can drive legally in Idaho as long as they don't drive erratically and can pass a field sobriety test, a federal appeals court ruled Monday.

While it is illegal to drive under the influence of alcohol or narcotics, Idaho law doesn't list marijuana as a narcotic, wrote the three-judge panel for the San Francisco-based 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

REV_00139037

The ruling overturned an impaired driving conviction against Matthew Patzer, 21, who was stopped for a broken tailgate light in 1998 and admitted to police he'd smoked marijuana at a party.

The appeals court said Patzer could not automatically be presumed impaired; he wasn't driving erratically and passed two field sobriety tests.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael J. Fica in Idaho said the government may ask the court to review its decision or request the U.S. Supreme Court hear the case.

Didn't you and I leave it that he would not do the Saturday event but would do the Sunday event in an official capacity (meaning the travel forms including the travel expense from outside source form -if expenses were going to be paid by the outside organization- would have to be filled out)?

The Hard Sell for a Place on the Bench

By Jonathan Groner
Legal Times
Tuesday, January 15, 2002

Miguel Estrada was not planning on attending President George W. Bush's kickoff for Hispanic Heritage Month last fall. But then the White House called and asked Estrada to come. So the nominee for a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit found himself in the East Room, along with Housing and Urban Development Secretary Mel Martinez and New York Mets shortstop Rey Ordoñez, among others.

From the podium, Bush pointed out Estrada. "America needs to have him on the bench," the president said. The nominee took a bow.

It was an extraordinary moment in the nomination of a federal judge, a process that mostly plays out behind the scenes. But in some cases, administration officials and the candidates themselves will step beyond the op-ed articles and political rhetoric in an effort to gain advantage in the confirmation wars.

And as Senate Democrats and the Bush administration prepare for a second year of battle over the future of the federal bench, the Oct. 12 White House event accents an important reality about the politics of judicial nominations: While most nominees will remain barely visible while awaiting confirmation, a handful at the center of the storm will be playing a larger role on their own behalf.

"The vast majority of nominees are requested to do absolutely nothing," says a Bush administration source knowledgeable about the judicial selection process. "They are disabled from speaking with the press or indeed from doing anything to advance their cause. But there is a small minority of nominees against whom forces have mobilized and who are therefore likely to be called in to help counteract those forces."

Estrada, who is seen by liberal critics as an "ultra-conservative" who must be carefully scrutinized, is one nominee who has been enlisted in his own defense. Jeffrey Sutton, a nominee for the 6th Circuit, also reached out after his nomination was announced in May, meeting with members of advocacy groups that are critical of his nomination.

Last fall, Sutton met for about 30 minutes at a restaurant in D.C.'s Union Station with Andrew Imparato, president of the D.C.-based American Association of People With Disabilities.

"I think he wanted to make sure that we knew where he was coming from on the law," says Imparato. "He was a very nice guy, but I remained convinced after the meeting that there are problems with his jurisprudence. I did not change my views on the nomination. We are opposed to it."

Sutton declines to discuss his meetings with interest groups, terming them confidential. But he would not be the only one in recent times to try to disarm his enemies.

Eleanor Acheson, who as assistant attorney general for policy development spearheaded the Clinton administration's judge-picking team, says it was not uncommon for Clinton picks to push their nominations in meetings with lawmakers and others. But she warns that the tactic can backfire.

"If you put the nominees out there, they can blow themselves up," she says, referring to the possibility of a gaffe in a meeting with a key interest group or senator. "You could have someone who would make a great judge, but they have a difficult personality, or blah-blah too much."

Visiting the White House

Earlier on Oct. 12, before the president made a point of mentioning Estrada, the Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher D.C. partner met with several Hispanic leaders in an unpublicized White House session that centered entirely on his nomination.

"We had an opportunity to hear him speak about his background, and several people asked him follow-up questions," says Marisa Demeo of the Mexican-American Legal Defense Fund, who was present. Like other liberal organizations including the Alliance for Justice and People for the American Way, MALDEF has yet to offer a thumbs up or thumbs down on Estrada.

Estrada's meetings with Hispanic groups have clear political purposes. They are an effort to humanize the nominee, combating what the White House sees as a misconception that he is a hard-liner. They can also be viewed as a way of peeling off the Hispanic organizations from the liberal coalition that for years has opposed conservative choices for the federal courts.

It wasn't the first time that the 40-year-old Estrada, a Honduran-born U.S. citizen, had met with key Hispanic-Americans. Earlier in the fall, he sat down at the D.C. offices of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering with leaders of the national and D.C. Hispanic bars-a meeting that soon helped him land the endorsement of both bar groups.

"I am happy to be as helpful as the administration wants me to be," says Estrada, who declines to discuss the specifics of the meetings. "If the White House calls me, I'll show up. But I won't take it upon myself to arrange a meeting. That would not be appropriate."

Sutton, the 6th Circuit nominee, has also stepped in to push for his own cause, on the issue that is causing his nomination grief.

A partner in the Columbus, Ohio, office of Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue, Sutton, 41, has been opposed by disability-rights groups because he has successfully argued cases before the Supreme Court that cut back on the protections of the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Sutton and Bush administration officials insist that these arguments were simply examples of an advocate doing his job, noting that the Supreme Court found that they were clearly based on constitutional principles of federalism. Sutton and his supporters say the cases don't reflect hostility to the rights of the disabled.

A parallel argument is being made on behalf of John Roberts Jr., a Hogan & Hartson partner who has been tapped for the D.C. Circuit. Like Sutton, Roberts, 46, has drawn fire from liberal groups because of his advocacy. While serving as President George H.W. Bush's deputy solicitor general, Roberts wrote a brief in a case involving federal funding for abortion counseling that cast doubt on the existence of a constitutional right to abortion.

Unlike either Estrada or Sutton, Roberts has not made any perceptible effort to meet with critics or move his nomination forward. Roberts declines comment.

Elliot Mincberg, legal director of the liberal People for the American Way, says there's no legal or ethical problem with one-on-one meetings between nominees and hostile interest groups, but he thinks they can be a waste of time.

"I really don't know how much that helps," says Mincberg, a veteran of many confirmation battles who was not discussing any specific nominee. "Historically, it has not made a large amount of difference. In fact, sometimes if a group is already formally opposed to a nominee, it can be awkward to meet with the nominee."

Several other reasons are often given for why this type of direct persuasion can be problematic. The administration official says the most important point is not to ruffle any feathers in the Senate.

"There's a general concern that if anyone gets too far in front, they'll be perceived as treading on Senate prerogatives. Senators may see this as the equivalent of hearings outside the hearing room. We just don't want them in the fray," says this source.

A lawyer who has been in the confirmation storm says that in addition to the problem of "seeming to interfere with the Senate process," a nominee also has to make sure that he or she "doesn't look as if they're working too hard for it."

In other words, it's best simply to practice law and go on with one's life.

But Acheson says this rule has to be modified under the proper circumstances-if it's a political battle and the nominee can make a good impression.

"When the fight is over ideology," she says, "your time should be spent in doing as much outreach as possible, even if you don't directly change a single mind. You get points just for offering yourself up to meet people, as long as you are someone who has no trouble spending a couple of hours talking about who you are and where you come from."

Acheson has advice for the Bush administration along those lines.

"Even if you know that the interest groups will make war, no matter how tough they can be, the best thing to do is to show that you're not afraid," she says.

Acheson points out that in the late 1990s, Richard Paez – then a U.S. district judge in California who was nominated for a slot on the 9th Circuit – came to Washington, D.C., several times to meet with senators and staff members.

Paez, whose nomination languished for four years before he was confirmed by a 59-39 vote, had drawn fire from the GOP for his views on affirmative action and judicial activism.

"We worked very hard to get him into meetings at which he would explain his background, who he was, and why he was dedicated to public service. The important thing was to address the issues and to respect them," says Acheson.

Paez did not return a call seeking comment.

As one lawyer who has been nominated in the past but asks to remain anonymous says, "Sometimes it's psychologically and emotionally helpful for your opponents if they see you face to face. These days, there are just too many drive-by shootings by interest groups."

Op/Eds

We Seek a Compromise on Judicial Nominees

By Senators Carl Levin & Debbie Stabenow

The Wall Street

Tuesday, January 15, 2002

Your Jan. 3 editorial unfairly attacked the record of Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy and failed to describe accurately the situation surrounding judicial nominations to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals.

We have repeatedly stated our support for bipartisan cooperation and under Sen. Leahy's leadership, that is the approach the committee has taken.

In fact, Chairman Leahy has worked tirelessly with members of both parties to consider fairly and confirm judicial nominees despite exceptionally difficult conditions. Consequently, and contrary to assertions contained in your editorial, his efforts have produced results. In the seven months of his judiciary chairmanship the Senate confirmed more judges in 2001 than it did during the first year of Mr. Clinton's first term, a period when Democrats controlled the Senate. With regard to the Sixth Circuit, Sen. Leahy has pursued a compromise solution that respects the prerogatives of both the president and the Senate and leads to a restoration of fairness in the nominating process.

The Republican Senate's treatment of many of President Clinton's nominees was in marked contrast. The Sixth Circuit provides a clear example:

Delaying tactics by Republican members of the Judiciary Committee kept the nominations of Michigan Sixth Circuit nominees Judge Helene White and Ms. Kathleen McCree Lewis pending without hearings for four years and more than one and half years, respectively. This was despite the fact that no concerns were ever raised about either woman's qualifications. Judge White's nominations stood without a hearing for longer than any nominee in Senate history. While not all wrongs can be righted, the unfair treatment of Judge White and Ms. Lewis can be because there are four Michigan vacancies on the Sixth Circuit Court. If this situation is not set right, it is likely that the indefensible treatment of these nominations by the Republican-led Senate could become standard practice.

We have repeatedly sought to reach a compromise and avoid a stalemate on the Sixth Circuit. Unfortunately, the White House rejected our offer to establish a bi-partisan judicial nominating commission to recommend nominees for the four Michigan vacancies on the court. In addition, to date the White House has also failed to act on a second compromise offer made by Chairman Leahy. Despite this, and contrary to the mischaracterization of your editorial, we continue to believe that we can achieve bi-partisan compromise. We urge the White House to work with both Chairman Leahy and us to accomplish that goal.

We have a long standing issue with the GAO and its desire to look into USTR's deliberative process in certain sensitive trade negotiations. Is there someone you can connect me with in Counsel's office or the OVP to see what legal research they have uncovered on the scope of GAO's

Hi Anne,
So, any luck with the Counsel's Office -- Gonzales or Flanigan -- for me and my story?
Question Repeat: Did the President decide coming into office that his White House and his Administration would assertively work to defend executive advice and decisionmaking from congressional oversight? Was there a game plan to try to "repair" the presidency in that regard?

I think I'm going to see Ari for 15 minutes at about 2:30 today, so I will be around in case you have any ideas for me.
Deadline today.

In order to get EVERYTHING I think this would need to be a coordinated effort between the following offices.

Counsel
Vice President Legislative Correspondence
Office of Policy Development and NEC and maybe OMB as well.

Brett - any others?

Brett and Brad:

You may want to take a look at United States v. Childs, No 00-3111 (7th Cir. Jan. 18, 2002) ("We took this case en banc to decide whether questioning during the course of lawful custody must be related to the reason for that custody. . . . The full court holds that, because questions are neither searches nor seizures, police need not demonstrate justification for each inquiry. Questions asked during detention may affect the reasonableness of that detention (which is a seizure) to the extent that they prolong custody, but questions that do not increase the length of detention (or that extend it only by a brief time) do not make the custody itself unreasonable or require suppression of evidence found as a result of the answers.")

Brett and Brad:

You may want to take a look at United States v. Childs, No 00-3111 (7th Cir. Jan. 18, 2002) ("We took this case en banc to decide whether questioning during the course of lawful custody must be related to the reason for that custody. . . . The full court holds that, because questions are neither searches nor seizures, police need not demonstrate justification for each inquiry. Questions asked during detention may affect the reasonableness of that detention (which is a seizure) to the extent that they prolong custody, but questions that do not increase the length of detention (or that extend it only by a brief time) do not make the custody itself unreasonable or require suppression of evidence found as a result of the answers.")

These times look fine to me. I do not think that WH will relax the standing bar on backgrounding before Ari's announcement, so Brett, can you make sure that Ari goes at 1:00 and that we are clear to do the PA backgrounder at 1:30? thanks

Viet,
I am working from the road. I assume we are still on for WH announcement on Wednesday?
Can we block off time on your schedule for ed boards? Is there anyway the WH will let us begin these before Ari's announcement?
1. We need to to PA first, 1:30-2:30 p.m. if Ari is annoncing at 1pm. Can we ask Ari to do announcements first?
2. Florida (2:45-3:15pm) and Texas (3:30-4 pm) ed boards (I don't want TEexas to ever say we ignore them) in all 3 we'll include the surrogates on the line towards the last few minutes.

I also think we should do Univison on Wednesday and highlight all of the Hispanic area where we have nominees.

I'll call you in the morning to discuss.
Lori

i don't think so. my sense is that burton sold some of these guys their theory of the case early on. maybe a call from Ari registering disappointment that they're not even asking us would be useful?

You have been approved to receive a new EOP issued BlackBerry Wireless e-mail device. I am trying to schedule a time with you when a technician can take care of the installation of the unit at your desktop computer. The installation of a BlackBerry takes about 1 hour. The technician will be happy to review the BlackBerry configuration with you and answer any questions you may have.

The technician will need your password several times during the installation. If you do not plan on being available during the installation, please contact Lori Lorenzo so that she may be available to help the technician to log into your PC.

Please return this e-mail to me with a date and time that you would like the technician to perform your install and whether you will or will not be there at the time the technician performs the install. We will do our best to work into your schedule. The installers are normally available from 9:30 to 4:00.

Another New Face for U.S. Trial Court

By Jonathan Groner
Legal Times

Thursday, December 20, 2001

On Dec. 11, the Senate unanimously confirmed Miller & Chevalier partner John Bates as the newest U.S. district judge for the District of Columbia.

Bates will be the second George W. Bush appointee to be seated on the trial court, following Judge Reggie Walton. His ascent marks the latest step in a little-noticed phenomenon -- the virtually complete turnover of the court's roster of active judges in less than a decade.

Once the 55-year-old Bates is sworn in to replace retired Judge Stanley Harris, an event that will probably occur late this week, he will be one of 11 active judges out of 14 on the court with less than eight years' experience as a federal judge.

Starting with four judges confirmed on the same day in June 1994, President Bill Clinton appointed nine judges to the D.C. federal trial court. Bush already has picked two.

The process is certain to continue. Richard Leon -- a white collar crime litigator and partner at the D.C. office of Columbus, Ohio's Vorys, Sater, Seymour and Pease -- was nominated Sept. 10 to yet another vacancy. Leon would replace Judge Norma Holloway Johnson, who took senior status last summer.

And Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson has announced his intention to take senior status as well when he becomes eligible at the end of next month. That will create a fourth opportunity for the president to name a judge to the court, which has 15 authorized judgeships.

The nomination of Leon, who has served frequently as counsel to GOP members of the House of Representatives, is not expected to be controversial. Hearings will take place in early 2002.

Leon impressed Deputy Attorney General Larry Thompson in 2000 when he served as a member of the Judicial Review Commission on Foreign Asset Control, a panel that Thompson chaired when he was in private practice. Like Bates and Walton, Leon garnered a "well qualified" rating from the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary, the highest ABA rating.

"I was pleased and honored to be nominated," says Leon, 52. "I look forward to working with the Senate staff and members, and I hope I can move quickly through the process."

Assuming that Leon is confirmed and that the Jackson seat is filled as well, the only judges on the court who served before 1994 will be two Ronald Reagan appointees -- Chief Judge Thomas Hogan, who joined the court in 1982, and Judge Royce Lamberth, who came on in 1987.

Bates, a longtime federal prosecutor in the District who had a lead role on Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's Whitewater investigative team, is well-regarded by both Democrats and Republicans. He declines comment.

Leon also gets good reviews from members of the opposing party.

"He will be a wonderful federal judge," says litigator Martha Purcell Rogers of Ober, Kaler, Grimes & Shriver, a Democrat. "He has extremely varied experience as a lawyer, which is a good thing. He is an inherently fair person."

Bush's judge-pickers might well wish to look for a woman to fill the fourth vacancy, since they have selected three male candidates so far. The court has only three female judges -- Clinton appointees Gladys Kessler, Colleen Kollar-Kotelly, and Ellen Segal Huvelle.

The two Bush nominees for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, John Roberts Jr. and Miguel Estrada, have not had a hearing, and none has yet been scheduled by Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.).

Daschle Says He Has No Plans To Block Recess Appointments

By Tully
Congressional Quarterly
Tuesday, December 18, 2001

"With the Bush administration indicating it will use recess appointments to fill some executive-branch posts in the coming weeks, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle said Tuesday he does not plan to block that effort." Daschle said, "It's not my intention to preclude this administration from using recess appointments as previous administrations have." Daschle said he "does expect to be 'notified and consulted' on such appointments before Congress leaves town for the year. In past years, Republicans angrily criticized former President Bill Clinton for making recess appointments without first notifying them." CQ added a number of Republican senators, "critical of Daschle's handling of judicial and non-judicial nominations, have urged President Bush to use his power to fill positions when Congress is in recess." White House spokesman Ari Fleischer "would not confirm reports that Bush plans to give recess appointments to Eugene Scalia to be solicitor of the Labor Department and Otto Reich to be assistant secretary of state for Western Hemisphere affairs." Fleischer said, "The Constitution does give the president authority to act otherwise, but the president continues to hope the Senate will do what the Senate should do." CQ added lawmakers "made clear the White House is considering that strategy, and numerous Republicans endorsed it." Republicans "expressed concern that Daschle would take steps to prevent recess appointments, such as not officially recessing the Senate when it concludes its business for the year. But the majority leader downplayed that notion on Tuesday."

Let's Have More Voices, Not Fewer, on New Judges

By Jim Fisher
Lewiston Morning Tribune
Tuesday, December 18, 2001

Republicans say Democratic Sens. Patty Murray and Maria Cantwell are unreasonably blocking the speedy appointment of a new federal judge in the Tacoma area because they did not have a say in the names submitted to President Bush. Democrats say Republican Rep. Jennifer Dunn had a lot of nerve submitting those names on her own when she knows former Republican Sen. Slade Gorton refused to permit consideration of any judicial nominations in which he did not have a hand. Who's right?

Both sides are.

More importantly, however, both are also wrong.

The tradition of presidents permitting senior senators of their party to choose judicial nominees in their own states is a long one. But that doesn't make it a good one. By permitting one person arbitrarily to decide who gets a lifetime appointment to a federal judgeship, the practice permits senators to reward virtually anyone -- a former law partner for example.

And that is exactly what has happened in both Washington and Idaho.

It gets discouraging to see disputes over this practice play out with each change of administration. That's not because someone -- in this case, Dunn -- is trying to reform the process, but because someone -- in this case, Dunn -- is trying to bend it to her own advantage.

As a House member, Dunn would customarily be out in the cold on the replacement for Judge Robert Bryan of Tacoma. But because both of Washington's senators are Democrats, and not of Bush's party, she called an end run around them. She sent Bush four names not seen, let alone approved, by Murray and Cantwell.

That played as well with the senators as Murray's attempt to bypass Gorton did under the Democratic administration of Bill Clinton. And her recent response echoes Gorton's nearly verbatim:

"We will not have a judge out of the Senate unless Senator Cantwell and I have a say naming the judge."

You can no doubt take that assertion to the bank. Not only do Murray and Cantwell have precedent, including Gorton's own, on their side, but the Senate is now in Democratic hands.

It's time for Dunn to call a strategic retreat, and, as Cantwell suggests, to compromise on a bipartisan commission to help choose Washington's judges, now and in the future. That would help take some of the politics out of the process. And who knows? It might even help put some better judges on the bench. -- J.F.

News Conference with Senator Lott

FDCH Political Transcripts

Tuesday, October 18, 2001

Excerpt:

QUESTION: Recess appointments for Gene Scalia and Otto Reich, did you talk about this with the president at the leadership meeting this morning, and should he do this?

LOTT: The president did, again, make an appeal to the Senate, specifically to Senator Daschle, to move the nominations. We have a large number of nominations for the administration that are still pending and a large number of judicial nominations that are still pending. We have an opportunity to move a whole lot of those this week, and we certainly should.

If something can't be worked out to get a direct vote on Scalia or -- to go to the Department of Labor, or Otto Reich, we should have a vote on those. But if we don't, I think the administration will consider recess appointments.

But as I did when I was the majority leader in the Clinton administration, there should be notification of the Senate what they're thinking about, and they should work with the Senate leaders as to any recess appointments that do occur.

LOTT: During the Clinton years there were a number of recess appointments, but they were almost always agreed to, with about three exceptions, and obviously one of those was Bill Lann Lee and a couple of others that we objected to strenuously. I really was upset that the president recess appointed a federal judge. That has rarely been done.

So I think that the Bush administration will be careful and will be -- you know, will make an effort to communicate what their thinking is. But if they're not going to be given fair treatment, then they are going to have to consider recess appointments.

Vicious Attacks on Senators Daschle and Leahy Seek to Force Speedy Confirmations of Judicial Nominees

People for the American Way

Report Documents Right Wing's Campaign to Exploit War on Terrorism, Short-Circuit Senate Scrutiny of Controversial Bush Nominees to Courts

People For the American Way Foundation today released a report detailing the vicious campaign that right-wing groups have employed since Sept. 11 to try to force quick confirmation of President Bush's judicial nominees. The report, How Low Will They Go? The Right Wing's Attack Campaign To Advance Judicial Nominations, documents attacks that go far beyond the usual partisan rhetoric—including attacks that challenge the patriotism and integrity of Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., and Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. The PFAWF report is available at: <http://www.pfaw.org/issues/right/HowLow.pdf>

"Nominees for lifetime appointments to our federal courts deserve close and careful scrutiny," said PFAWF President Ralph G. Neas said. "This attack campaign is designed to undercut that scrutiny, which is a critical responsibility that our Constitution confers on the Senate. Even worse, these right-wing groups have stooped to new levels by trying to use the war on terrorism to further their own political agenda for the courts. Senators must resist this campaign of intimidation."

How Low Will They Go? reveals how this attack campaign was first crafted. Detailing a memo written by a Republican staffer and enthusiastically endorsed by at least one person in the White House, the report reveals how the Right has used the Sept. 11 tragedies as a vehicle to press for speedy confirmation of Bush's judicial nominations by falsely claiming these nominees are needed on the bench to order wiretaps and search warrants necessary for fighting terrorism.

In the wake of the terrorist attacks, right-wing groups and their Senate GOP allies have held news conferences and issued statements to put Senators Daschle and Leahy on notice: confirm the president's judicial nominees or we'll use the war on terrorism to wage war on you. As How Low

Will They Go? explains, the post-Sept. 11 strategies used by the far-right leaders include:

Falsely suggesting that federal appeals court vacancies are having a negative effect on fighting terrorism—even though the judges who serve on these courts do not have responsibility for granting search warrants or approving wiretaps.

Questioning the patriotism and integrity of Senate Democrats, including placing ads in the home state of Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle that challenge his commitment to fighting terrorism.

Claiming that Senate Democrats are engaging in "racial profiling."

Calling for Senator Leahy's removal as chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Unsuccessfully attempting to link judicial confirmations to foreign aid.

Our Courts at Risk: Senate Has Power to Stop Ultra-Conservative Bush Nominees

By Linda Berg

National Organization for Women

December, 2001

Although the issue of judicial nominations has been quiet thus far, activists in both parties are preparing for a cataclysmic clash after the first of the year. To date, the Senate Judiciary Committee has held 10 hearings on George W. Bush's nominees, resulting in 27 favorable recommendations to the full Senate. However, there are at least 100 federal court vacancies and a preoccupied Senate charged with confirming new judges.

Republicans are urging quick Senate confirmation of many right-wing judges, using "national security" as their pretext for glossing over the nominees' hostility toward women's rights. These are the same Republicans who, hypocritically, blocked so many of President Clinton's judicial nominees on ideological grounds.

Meanwhile, Democratic Senators have been unwilling to expend political capital opposing more than a few of Bush's conservative jurists. And many commentators are silent, perhaps fearful of being called "unpatriotic" for opposing the President during wartime. NOW has declared this unprecedented onslaught of right-wing judicial nominees an emergency that threatens the rights of women. "The courts should be the guardians of our rights," said Terry O'Neill, Treasurer of NOW's Political Action Committees. "But political and religious extremists have taken aim at the courts in order to dismantle those rights."

Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has thus far managed to hold up the nominations of some of the most egregious candidates; however, we expect the battle lines to be drawn soon after the first of the year.

The fate of reproductive rights, civil rights, lesbian rights, disability rights and so many other gains feminists have fought for in the past 35 years will be in the hands of these judges.

We are also facing the ever-growing threat of a Supreme Court vacancy, and Bush will surely choose a nominee from his stable of right-wing judicial ideologues. Just one new Supreme Court Justice could endanger the future of Roe v. Wade, so it is crucial that we do everything within our power to keep opponents of our rights off the bench.

Brett,

I just wanted to sent a quick reminder that the "Enrolled Bill HR 3392 - Gerald B.H. Solomon Saratoga National Cemetery" red tag is due today at 10:00 AM. You received it sometime this weekend.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Sincerely,
Patrick

It is 101 vacancies on the web page now (you might have to reload the page) due to the resignation of Joe Kendall in Texas.

Please check, but I believe that the correct number of vacancies is now 101, not 100. Brett, is this because of the death in Texas?

Senate Chairmen Seek Release Of Energy Panel's Records (WPost)

By Dana Milbank

The Washington Post, January 24, 2002

Three Senate committee chairmen yesterday called for the release of White House records detailing development of President Bush's energy policy, and GOP Senate leaders signaled that the administration would back down from its nine-month refusal to provide the records.

In a letter yesterday, the chairmen expressed their support for the investigative arm of Congress, the General Accounting Office, to pursue its efforts to obtain meeting records of the White House energy task force, which was chaired by Vice President Cheney and produced Bush's energy policy.

The letter, to Comptroller General David Walker, who heads the GAO, escalates a congressional bid to discover whether Enron Corp. and other energy companies influenced the task force's recommendations, and how. "Our concern is that we would be setting a dangerous precedent, and would be shirking Congress's oversight responsibilities if these questions are not asked, or if the administration is allowed to avoid answering them," wrote the senators, Governmental Affairs Committee Chairman Joseph I. Lieberman (D-Conn.), Commerce Committee Chairman Ernest F. Hollings (D-S.C.), Armed Services Committee Chairman Carl M. Levin (D-Mich.), who is also chairman of the investigations subcommittee of Governmental Affairs, and Byron L. Dorgan (D-N.D.), chairman of the Commerce Committee's consumer affairs subcommittee.

Reps. Henry A. Waxman (D-Calif.) and John D. Dingell (D-Mich.) first made the request of the GAO to get the meeting records last April, voicing concern that Bush campaign contributors shaped administration energy policy. Cheney's counsel, David S. Addington, said the requests were not valid because they came from minority members of committees, not the panels or their chairmen.

Yesterday's letter undermined that argument. "They're acting in their capacity as chairmen," Dorgan spokesman Barry Piatt said.

The action increased the likelihood that the task force probe could merge with congressional investigations into the Enron bankruptcy. Both the Governmental Affairs and Commerce committees are investigating.

The GAO has said it will decide within the coming weeks whether to take the administration to court over its refusal to provide the records. Officials said the GAO has been shopping for law firms and had been hoping for a show of support from Congress such as yesterday's letter. But the White House may relent before the GAO pursues legal action. Asked yesterday about the task force records, Sen. Don Nickles (R-Okla.), the assistant minority leader, said, "I think all this information will come out in the very near future." Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) added: "I think Vice President Cheney is going to speak to that in the next few days, and I think that he will respond appropriately." White House press secretary Ari Fleischer said, "There has been no change in the White House position at all." But he left open the possibility the matter could be reconsidered, noting: "I cannot make a prediction about any future and every future circumstance that may or may not come up."

Subject: political travel

I'm trying to get a better understanding of travel procedures when it comes to sending Administration officials to do political events for our Republican candidates. Example:

Secretary Evans has agreed to speak to the SD Chamber of Commerce in Pierre, SD. We would also like him to do a fundraiser for John Thune. Because there would be a fundraiser in the same city as the SD chamber event, the Thune campaign is responsible for travel costs. (I conferred with Toner on FEC law)

FEC law also states that a campaign can use a corporate plane if first class airfare is reimbursed for each person traveling before the plane takes off. Legally, it is ok for Thune to fly Evans on a corporate plane.

But, my question for you is will you allow Evans to fly on a corporate plane?? If we find an owner who allows his plane to be used frequently for political travel and the company doesn't have significant business before the federal government, can we generally operate under the assumption that this will work?? This is particularly important for far away states like SD. Please advise.

Thanks.

Supreme Patience

By Abner J. Mikva

REV_00139297

The Supreme Court has played different roles in the history of our country. Sometimes it has been a passive branch, resolving mostly private disputes and letting the political branches make and change public policy. Most of the time it has tried to avoid the "political thicket."

In 2000, however, it inserted itself into the granddaddy of all political disputes when it decided that Florida's electoral votes would be awarded to George Bush. While Bush v. Gore was an obvious attention-grabber, there have been others in which the current court has flexed its political muscles:

It has imposed limits on what areas Congress can regulate.

It has cut back substantially on any affirmative action programs that government agencies can conduct, even when legislatively authorized.

And doubt continues to fester on whether the Constitution guarantees a woman's right to terminate a pregnancy.

What makes these court decisions so troublesome, albeit fascinating, is that most have been resolved 5 to 4. With three justices over age 70, speculation about a change in the court's delicate balance is unavoidable. What kind of person would President Bush nominate? And what kind of nominee would the Senate confirm? Suppose the Senate did not confirm anybody. Would that be deemed political conduct? Would that be a responsible exercise of the Senate's constitutional power? I think the answer to both questions is yes.

There is nothing magic about the number nine for the size of the Supreme Court. The Constitution does not suggest a number, and the first court was authorized to have six members. The authorized number has gone up and down during our history, usually for very political reasons. It went to 10 in 1863 and then was reduced to nine because Congress was angry at President Andrew Johnson. In the 1930s when the court continued to strike down New Deal legislation, President Franklin D. Roosevelt threatened to increase the size of the court by one for every justice who was over age 70. The plan failed in passage, but "apostasy and death" caused the court to reverse its doctrinal direction.

Vacancies also have persisted when the Senate was unhappy with the particular nominee that the president sent up for confirmation. While sometimes the retiring justice has continued to serve until a successor was chosen, often the resignation was immediate or the vacancy occurred as a result of death. For example, a vacancy existed for three years because Congress was unhappy with President Lincoln's choices, and then with those of his successor. When Congress was unhappy with Lyndon B. Johnson's effort to promote Abe Fortas to chief justice, a vacancy persisted for more than a year.

The Constitution states that the president is to nominate justices and appoint them "by and with the advice and consent" of the Senate. While presidents seldom request the advice of the Senate in advance of their nominations, it has occurred. President Hoover wanted to appoint a westerner to fill a vacancy, but his ally, Sen. William Borah of Idaho, persuaded him to appoint Justice Benjamin Cardozo instead. President Clinton was discouraged from nominating Sen. George Mitchell at least in part by senators who thought it would be a political mistake.

There are more than a few occasions in which the Senate has exercised its political powers to help shape the makeup of the court. There are special reasons why the present political climate warrants such an action.

First, this president does not have the mandate of a national plurality. While the court did resolve the dispute about Florida's electoral votes, giving President Bush an electoral college majority, it could not alter the popular vote. Bush lost to Al Gore by more than 500,000 votes. Most of the other appointments the president will make are for finite terms, but his choice to fill a vacancy on the court -- a lifetime appointment -- probably would serve for many years after the people resolve this political anomaly and elect a president who wins the popular vote.

Second, the delicate balance of the court on fundamental issues makes even a single appointment of great moment. During the Warren Court years, when the justices made some fundamental changes in criminal justice, elections and the system of segregation in our public institutions, there were usually substantial majorities supporting the result. The Warren Court did not strike down that many congressional decisions. But seldom in its history has the court invalidated so many acts of Congress by 5 to 4 decisions as at present.

Still another reason that the political climate warrants Senate involvement is that the court itself made the final decision as to who should be president. That judgment raised many doubts about the legitimacy of the court's actions. There was gossip that at least one of the justices was upset by the consequences to the court of a Gore victory, and that one of the justices in the 5 to 4 majority was close to changing his vote. Conservative scholars who favored the result of the case politically have nevertheless criticized the "equal protection" rationale the unsigned majority opinion provided for the decision. While the events of Sept. 11 have stilled much of the controversy about the manner in which the 2000 election was decided, there is still unhappiness, partisan and otherwise, about the court's intervention.

The appointment of Supreme Court justices is a shared responsibility. The Senate has a plenary power to advise and consent. This has never been perceived to be some kind of rubber-stamp function, and it has been used with substantive results on less compelling occasions.

This Supreme Court is in an activist mood. Each year yields a bumper crop of decisions that overrule or modify political choices made by Congress. If there are to be changes in its personnel, they ought to be made by a president who has a popular vote mandate. I think the Senate should not act on any Supreme Court vacancies that might occur until after the next presidential election. Changes in the existing delicate balance could put the very legitimacy of the court as an institution at risk. Other than the black robes and the high bench, that legitimacy is all that the court has going for it.

The writer has served as a Democratic House member from Illinois, as chief judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and as White House counsel under President Clinton. He is currently a visiting professor at the University of Chicago Law School.

The Guantanamo Story

Friday, January 25, 2002; Page A24

THE BUSH administration has been forced to spend the past several days fending off a wave of international outrage and diplomatic protests about its treatment of al Qaeda and Taliban prisoners at the Guantanamo naval base in Cuba. America-bashers in the European press and human rights community, whose objections to the Afghan military campaign were cut short by the swift U.S. victory, have had a field day trumpeting allegations of "torture," even as their governments summon U.S. ambassadors to deliver lectures about respect for the Geneva Convention. An indignant Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld spent an hour on television refuting "the questions, allegations and breathless reports," which he attributed to "people who are either uninformed, misinformed or poorly informed." That may be true; there is no evidence that the Guantanamo prisoners have been treated inhumanely. But if Guantanamo has been a public relations -- as opposed to human rights -- debacle, then the Bush administration has only itself to blame.

Mr. Rumsfeld has been toasted around Washington for his public reports on the war, but his handling of the prisoner issue has done much to ignite the international controversy. The globally broadcast misinformation about which he complains stems largely from his own policy of strictly limiting media access to Guantanamo while offering accounts of U.S. handling of the prisoners that have been by turns vague, flippant or simply wrong. Mr. Rumsfeld improperly labeled all the prisoners as "unlawful combatants" and said, incorrectly, that they were not covered by the Geneva Convention. He refused to provide a list of the prisoners or the countries they are from, and several times suggested that he was unconcerned about their treatment, which he said was better than what they had dealt out in Afghanistan. Much of what he said suggested that the Bush administration would respect international law only so far as it chose to. In that context, it's not surprising that America's critics read brutalities into the sketchy media pool reports and photos coming from Cuba.

In appearances this week Mr. Rumsfeld and other administration officials have offered some reassuring clarifications. The defense secretary now says that "all detainees" are being treated "consistently with the principles of the Geneva Convention." He acknowledged that the detainees cannot be designated as unlawful combatants -- as opposed to prisoners of war -- without a legal process, and must be released if they are not charged with crimes. He indicated that some could be tried by criminal courts or courts-martial, some released to their home countries, and some sent before military tribunals; under the Geneva Convention, the latter procedure would be legitimate for those legally designated as unlawful combatants. Mr. Rumsfeld also said the Pentagon was studying the "right way" to release information about the identities of the prisoners.

The administration has now suspended the transfer of additional groups of prisoners to Guantanamo, saying it wants to interview the ones it has. That seems a wise course; meanwhile, construction of more sturdy and permanent housing for detainees should be speeded, and more outside observers given a closer look at the facilities that now exist. Most important, the administration should make clear that it will fully respect the Geneva Convention in its handling of all detainees. Doing so would not hamper its ability to prosecute al Qaeda and Taliban members for the crimes they have committed, and might not require any significant change in the treatment of the prisoners. It will, however, make clear that the United States upholds international human rights law -- and it would at least weaken the unnecessary international tempest that has raged over Guantanamo this week.

Leahy just made a floor statement in response to the Judge's op-ed ripping the WH for a variety of supposed sins, including lack of consultation. Tim has asked me to do a letter for the Judge to Leahy responding to his floor statement. He'd like the draft today. I am having Brent send to each of you a copy of the floor statement. Would you please shoot me any thoughts, facts, figures, arguments, etc. that you would like to see in the letter? I'll try to incorporate as much as I can.

Also, Jennifer, if you could have Neal Suit send me the latest talking points and statistics for use, that would be great. Thanks.

Moose,

This in from Randy.

In my opinion, it appears that Friedman could host a fund-raising reception with certain exceptions:

1. He'd have to hold the reception while not on duty. (Presumably, he'll host the party on a day when he's not here as a PFIAB member.)
2. He could send out the invitation but the invitation could not address the issue of fundraising. Something along the lines of "A party in honor of"
3. He could give a speech or some type of opening remarks, but again, he couldn't solicit political contributions. Another speaker who wasn't bound by Hatch Act would have to do that.
3. The invitation couldn't mention his membership on PFIAB.

I've got a call into OSC to double-check this, but that's my take.

This latest dustup is not entirely new for Leighton. In 1992 President George Bush nominated him to be a federal judge. That nomination was delayed and ultimately dropped after Bill Clinton was elected president.

Bush Nominates Tacoma Lawyer to Federal Bench

By Katherine Pfleger
The Associated Press
Thursday, January 24, 2002

President Bush has nominated Tacoma, Wash., lawyer Ronald Leighton to be a federal district judge in Western Washington, over the protests of the state's U.S. senators who say they were excluded from the selection process.

Democratic Sens. Patty Murray and Maria Cantwell have promised to block the nomination with procedural moves unless the White House uses a bipartisan commission to find a replacement for Judge Robert J. Bryan at the U.S. District Court in Tacoma. For instance, Murray has said she will put a "hold" on Leighton's nomination - a maneuver that would prevent the Senate from voting on a judge.

Her spokesman Todd Webster said Murray has been "crystal clear" that any nominee must come from a commission made up of Republicans and Democrats.

"This is a tradition that has served the people of Washington state in getting even-tempered, qualified, balanced judges for lifetime appointments," Webster said Wednesday.

Though the nomination appeared headed for a deadlock, a senior White House official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the administration is hopeful Leighton will be approved.

"We think, in the end, the Senate's job ... is to focus on the qualifications," the official said. "Mr. Leighton is just an absolute A-plus nominee."

Murray and Cantwell have been sparring with the White House for nearly a year about how the opening would be filled. At the White House's direction, Rep. Jennifer Dunn, R-Wash., formed a Republican selection committee, even though the senators considered the negotiations ongoing.

Dunn said Leighton is a strong candidate who has been vetted twice for federal judicial openings but never approved. She said the senators were invited to appoint people to an evenly divided bipartisan selection commission but the senators didn't want to be bound by the commission's final four candidates.

Murray and Cantwell "have chosen to use a process excuse," Dunn said. "Going backward (with a new commission) would not solve the problem."

Cantwell is a member of the Judiciary Committee, responsible for screening federal judicial nominees. Her spokesman Jed Lewison said she is "in sync" with Murray on the need for a bipartisan commission.

Cantwell "will take the necessary actions to make sure that a bipartisan process is the one that is used," Lewison said.

Presidents historically have listened to the wishes of home-state senators when filling judicial vacancies. However, three states - Washington, California and Wisconsin - have instead used commissions made up of Republicans and Democrats to fill openings.

White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales has called the states "isolated exceptions." He has said Bush is not generally supportive of the commissions, though he would be willing to use them - under conditions that Murray and Cantwell found objectionable.

Leighton's nomination comes as Bush is working to fill 101 federal judicial openings, including 70 in U.S. district courts.

The opening in Tacoma was created a year ago when Bryan took "senior status," a type of semiretirement that allowed him to significantly limit his cases, though he is carrying a full load until a successor is named.

In a phone interview, Leighton said he asked to be considered because he would love the job, but was cautious about how his nomination would work out.

"The process is a difficult one and fraught with issues that don't involve me," he said.

Leighton is a partner with the Seattle-area law firm of Gordon Thomas Honeywell Malanca Peterson & Danheim.

Bush Names 3 to U.S. District Court

By Torsten Ove
The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Thursday, January 24, 2002

President Bush yesterday nominated three local lawyers to judgeships in U.S. District Court.

Bush named Joy Flowers Conti and Art Schwab, both lawyers at the Downtown firm of Buchanan Ingersoll, and Allegheny County Solicitor Terry McVerry to fill long-standing vacancies on the federal bench.

The three must be confirmed by the U.S. Senate, a lengthy process that could be dragged out because of a backlog of nearly 70 other nominees for federal judgeships.

"I'm expecting it could be months," said Conti, who said she was honored to have been chosen and promised to do her best as a federal judge.

Schwab said he is eager to serve, too.

"My family and I are very joyful," he said. "I'm looking forward to being of service in Western Pennsylvania."

McVerry couldn't be reached yesterday.

The Western District of Pennsylvania has been short of its full complement of 10 judges for years.

Currently there are four vacancies. When U.S. District Judge William Standish takes senior status in March, it will be five. And when U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith is confirmed by the Senate for a position on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, it will be six.

The filling of judicial vacancies nationwide has been hindered repeatedly by partisan bickering. The delay in getting local judgeships filled was rooted in a political dispute between former President Clinton and Pennsylvania's Republican senators, Rick Santorum and Arlen Specter. But now the process seems to be moving forward.

"It's a real breakthrough," said Schwab.

Schwab is chief counsel for complex litigation at Buchanan Ingersoll. A 1968 graduate of Grove City College, he received his law degree from the University of Virginia in 1972.

Conti, a 1973 graduate of Duquesne University law school, is a former tenured professor of law at Duquesne and taught courses on corporations, corporate finance, corporate reorganizations and bankruptcy.

McVerry, a former state legislator, worked as an assistant district attorney and is a former Allegheny County Common Pleas judge.

Pickering Nomination for Federal Court Under Fire

By Jason Straziuso

The Commercial Appeal

Thursday, January 24, 2002

Some advocacy groups are challenging a Bush nominee for a federal appeals court job, claiming the Mississippi judge gave false testimony when he became a district judge a decade ago.

Charles Pickering, a former state senator and the father of Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.), also has come under fire for some of his rulings and his votes in the Legislature during the 1970s.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott says Pickering has the support of key Senate Democrats and will have a second hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee in the next two weeks, following an initial hearing in October. Pickering has been nominated for a seat on the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

L. A. Warren of the Mississippi NAACP legal division said his group believes Pickering gave false testimony to the Senate during his 1990 confirmation hearing to become a federal judge.

During that hearing, according to Senate records reviewed by The Associated Press, Pickering testified he "never had any contact with the Sovereignty Commission," Mississippi's now-defunct segregation watchdog agency.

However, a 1972 letter in the Sovereignty Commission files includes a reference to three then-state senators, including Pickering, saying they "requested to be advised" about a group organizing pulpwood workers in the state.

The Sovereignty Commission was established in the 1950s to spy on individuals and groups who might threaten the state's official policy of segregation. Its agents also kept tabs on organizations it felt had Communist leanings.

The 1972 letter was addressed to the commission's director, W. Webb Burke, from Edgar C. Fortenberry, one of its investigators assigned to southern Mississippi. Fortenberry's letter did not identify to whom Pickering's request was made.

There was no other documentation in the files to indicate Pickering had direct contact with the commission, which ceased functioning in 1973. Pickering served in the Mississippi Senate from 1972 to 1980.

Pickering, who was given a "well qualified" rating by the American Bar Association, told AP in a telephone interview he was aware of the issues likely to be brought up at his next hearing.

"It is not appropriate for me to comment on the Sovereignty Commission issue or any other issue until I appear before the Judiciary Committee," he said.

Lott (R-Miss.) said he has received "commitments of support" for Pickering from Sens. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) the Judiciary Committee Chairman, and Sen. Tom Daschle, the Senate Majority Leader.

"I've been assured they're going to vote on him in early February and he'll be confirmed overwhelmingly," he said.

Lott also said Pickering had "broad support" politically.

Mimi Devlin, a spokesman for the Senate Judiciary Committee, said "no such promises or confirmations from Senator Leahy" were given to Lott. No date has been set for a second hearing, she said.

The Alliance for Justice, a Washington-based association of advocacy organizations, has monitored judicial nominees since 1984. The self-described "progressive" group on Thursday plans to highlight Pickering's record, which it calls anti-women and anti-minority.

The alliance points to Pickering's political record from the 1970s, including his votes for a Republican Party platform against abortion rights, and his votes as a state senator in the voting rights arena.

Judicial Nominee to Face Questions About Enron Contributions

The Associated Press

Wednesday, January 23, 2002

A federal judicial nominee who wrote a ruling favorable to Enron Corp. after taking campaign money from the now-bankrupt energy trader will get close scrutiny, Vermont Sen. Patrick Leahy said.

Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen wrote a unanimous ruling that saved Enron $225,000 in taxes, two years after taking $8,600 in campaign contributions from the company, according to the watchdog group Texans for Public Justice. President Bush has tapped Owen to become a member of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. She has been awaiting Senate confirmation.

"The Senate will look at Justice Owen's Enron rulings as part of her overall record," Leahy told The Dallas Morning News in Wednesday's editions.

"She has a right to take contributions, but any judge - liberal or conservative - faces the legitimate question about whether a contribution influenced their thinking," said Leahy, a Democrat.

Owen, a Republican, was the author of a unanimous Texas Supreme Court opinion in 1996 that settled a tax issue in Enron's favor. The opinion rejected the Spring Independent School District's argument that the Enron natural gas inventory should be assessed at a value $15 million higher than stated by the company.

That decision spared Enron $225,000 in taxes. It came two years after Owen accepted $8,600 in Enron contributions, according to Texans for Public Justice. The nonprofit group tracks campaign spending.

Owen has not fielded questions regarding the Enron contribution or her judicial decisions.

Texas Justice's Enron Money Draws Criticism

By Michelle Mittelstadt
The Dallas Morning News
Wednesday, January 23, 2002

An Enron scandal that has proved nettlesome to the executive and legislative branches now is spilling over to the judiciary, with word that a prospect for a prestigious federal appellate court seat received Enron campaign contributions and later authored a Texas Supreme Court opinion favorable to the bankrupt energy trader.

Senators "undoubtedly" will examine Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen's dealings with Enron when her nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is considered, the Senate Judiciary Committee chairman said Tuesday.

"The Senate will look at Justice Owen's Enron rulings as part of her overall record," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. "She has a right to take contributions, but any judge _ liberal or conservative _ faces the legitimate question about whether a contribution influenced their thinking." The Republican justice was the author of a unanimous Texas Supreme Court opinion in 1996 that settled an arcane tax issue in Enron's favor, rejecting the Spring Independent School District's argument that the Enron natural gas inventory should be assessed at a value $15 million higher than stated by the company.

That ruling, which spared Enron $225,000 in taxes, came two years after she accepted $8,600 in Enron contributions, said Texans for Public Justice, a nonprofit group that tracks campaign spending.

Liberal advocacy organizations, which already have been geared up for a fight over the Owen nomination, said her Enron ties raise questions about the conservative jurist's candidacy.

"We're talking about a candidate to the second-highest court in the land and for a lifetime appointment," said Nan Aron, president of the Alliance for Justice, which calls Justice Owen and other Bush judicial nominees too extreme. "Already there are several major questions that have been raised concerning her overall bias, as revealed in her opinions in favor of wealthy and powerful interests.

"She will have a very, very tough road ahead."

The judiciary committee has yet to schedule hearings on Justice Owen's nomination.

"I'm not at all saying this is a total disqualification . . . but it is an additional factor that makes her all the more controversial," said Elliot Mincberg, legal director of People for the American Way.

Justice Owen was not fielding questions, but her defenders rejected the notion that the donations should disqualify her.

"Absolutely not," said Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

At the White House, the Owen criticism was dismissed as partisan posturing.

"Judge Owen is a person of the highest integrity, who is extremely well qualified," said White House spokesman Scott McClellan.

Mr. Gramm noted that Enron, once one of Texas' largest companies, gave to many candidates.

That's the problem, said Craig McDonald, noting that Texas, unlike most states, elects judges and allows them to take contributions from law firms and other interested parties. A Texans for Public Justice study estimates that 43 percent of Justice Owen's campaign contributions have come from interests that have done business before the state's highest court.

Since 1993, Enron has contributed $134,000 to Texas Supreme Court members, the group says.

"We're all victims of our times, and the Enron scandal has probably just increased the scrutiny over this practice," McDonald said.

While Justice Owen is precluded by judicial ethics from discussing her 1996 opinion, Supreme Court spokesman Osler McCarthy, who spoke for her, said the criticism directed at her was partisan gamemanship.

Her ruling, in a 9-0 decision, affirmed the constitutionality of a law passed 171-1 in the Texas House and 30-1 in the state Senate, he said.

The Fall of Enron; Contributions at Issue in Judge's Confirmation

By Janet Elliot

The Houston Chronicle

Wednesday, January 2002

Enron's political contributions have become an issue in the confirmation battle involving a Texas Supreme Court justice who has been nominated to a federal appellate bench.

Liberal groups concerned about President Bush's nomination of Justice Priscilla Owen to a vacancy on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals have seized on a 1996 opinion that saved Enron hundreds of thousands of dollars in property taxes.

Owen took $ 8,700 in contributions from Enron's political action committee and executives during her 1994 election campaign.

"Now that the Enron scandal has every politician scrambling to clear their name of Enron contributions, I think that the money absolutely will be a key issue in Owen's confirmation," said Craig McDonald, director of Texans for Public Justice, which monitors campaign contributions.

Owen is one of the most conservative members of the all-Republican Supreme Court.

The tax case involved a dispute with Spring Independent School District over the date on which Enron would inventory natural gas stored in a salt dome facility. The inventory volume differed by $ 15 million worth of gas between Sept. 1, 1989, and Jan. 1, 1990.

Because Enron elected to use the earlier appraisal, the school district claimed it lost $ 225,000 in tax revenue.

Owen wrote the opinion for a unanimous court that reversed a ruling by Houston's 14th Court of Appeals that a law classifying inventory separately from other property was unconstitutional.

"The winter months are typically a period of peak demand for natural gas. It is not arbitrary or capricious for the Legislature to permit the taxable value of natural gas inventories to be determined on a date other than January 1, when inventories may be higher than at other times of the year," wrote Owen.

Owen's opinion stated that the lost tax revenue was $ 15 million, but she apparently confused the tax loss with the difference in valuation, said Osler McCarthy, a spokesman for the Supreme Court. McCarthy said the case was a "pretty routine tax case soundly decided based on U.S. Supreme Court precedent."

The school district and its lawyers declined comment on the case. But a lawyer who represented Enron said he's offended at the suggestion that the court decided the case on anything other than the law.

"We won that thing on the merits. That was a clear case of interpretation of legislative ability to give taxpayers the opportunity to reduce their tax burden," said Berry Bowen, a Houston solo practitioner who worked in Enron's legal department from 1990 to 1995.

Elliot Minberg, legal director of People for the American Way, a group that monitors judicial nominations, said Owen's authoring of an opinion after accepting a political contribution "raises an issue about the appearance of impropriety."

"It would be equally a problem if it wasn't Enron. It's an issue regardless of who the corporate contributor would be," said Minberg, whose group has expressed concern but not opposed Owen.

Last May, Bush nominated Owen to the New Orleans-based court, which hears appeals from Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi. The Senate Judiciary Committee has not yet scheduled a hearing on her nomination.

In another 1996 case involving Enron, Owen recused herself.

McCarthy, the court spokesman, said she apparently recused herself because her former law firm, Andrews & Kurth, was involved in the case.

Justices can legally accept donations from lawyers or parties with cases before the court. Texas has been regularly criticized for its high-dollar Supreme Court races.

"Nobody on this court is going to dispute that the system is broken and needs to be corrected. But it's the system we have until the Texas Legislature gives Texas voters the chance to change it," said McCarthy.

U.S. Bench Nomination Expected for Martinez

By Jay Weaver

The Miami Herald

Wednesday, January 23, 2002

President Bush is expected to nominate Jose "Joe" Martinez as a Miami federal judge as soon as today, capping his career as a legal Naval officer, U.S. prosecutor, drug-enforcement director and top civil lawyer.

The affable Martinez would also bring a sports fanatic's perspective to the bench.

Next to the law, his real passion is his alma mater, the University of Miami. He's crazy about UM baseball, and he calls the Canes football games in Spanish on the Archdiocese of Miami's radio station, WACC. Martinez, born in the Dominican Republic and raised in Miami, was the front-runner over Miami-Dade Circuit Judge Jerald Bagley and Miami federal Magistrate Ted Bandstra, according to sources familiar with the nomination. The lifetime appointment to the Miami federal seat, which pays $150,000 a year and had been occupied by U.S. District Judge Edward Davis for 21 years, must be confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

"His dedication to this country and this community is incredible," said Thomas D. Wood Sr., a UM trustee. He was Martinez's Naval Reserve commander in 1977 when both went to the U.S. base in Guantanamo Bay to provide legal assistance to military personnel.

"I've never heard him say an ugly word about anyone," said Wood. "Liking people is what enables him to help people."

Martinez, 60, declined to comment about his imminent nomination, saying it would be "inappropriate." The White House, which has scheduled a press conference for today on federal judicial nominations, wouldn't comment either.

Martinez, a Republican, was recommended along with Bagley and Bandstra as finalists last summer for Davis' position by the 22-member Federal Judicial Nominating Commission. The Florida panel's chairman, Roberto Martinez, a former U.S. attorney in Miami, said they were interviewed by the state's Democratic U.S. senators, Bill Nelson and Bob Graham, and then the White House.

Joe Martinez came close to being nominated for the federal bench in 1992, when then-Republican Sen. Connie Mack recommended him to President George Bush. But when Bill Clinton won the White House, Martinez's bid for the bench came to a halt.

This time, his appointment seems certain.

Davis, now chairman of Florida litigation for the Miami-based law firm, Akerman Senterfitt, described Martinez as a "real trial lawyer" who would make a popular choice to replace him. "He'll come on well prepared for the federal job," Davis said. "He's well liked by people who do business with him. You can rely on his word."

Said past Florida Bar President Herman Russomanno: "He has the virtues of a federal judge - integrity, honesty, high moral standards and what I refer to as open-mindedness and impartiality."

Martinez's life is an immigrant's success story.

His parents left the Dominican Republic with Martinez, his sister and their grandmother at the end of World War II. They first settled in New York City, but relocated to Miami in 1949.

His father, though a lawyer in the Dominican Republic, launched an import-export business here. Young Martinez worked his way through the University of Miami, studying marketing.

He dreamed of becoming a Naval pilot, but that was dashed. He reset his sights on law school at UM, graduating in 1965, and married his wife, Mary Anne, the following year.

His first job was as a Naval officer in the Judge Advocate General Corps in Key West. After he left active duty in 1968, he joined the Reserves and retired decades later as a captain.

Martinez quickly made his mark as an assistant U.S. prosecutor in the late 1960s - an era when the nation's war on drugs was in its infancy in Miami. He was tapped to become the regional director of the Office for Drug Abuse Law Enforcement in 1972.

"We were looking for an experienced person who was liked by the agents but also one who was tough enough and could not be conned by the agents," said former ODALE Deputy Director John R. Bartels Jr. "Joe was heads and tails above everyone else in Florida. His name kept coming up."

Since the mid-1970s, Martinez has still kept his hand in criminal law, from tax evasion to racketeering cases. But he has been more active as a corporate civil lawyer, including major product-liability trials, such as the Florida class-action lawsuit against Philip Morris.

Martinez, a father of two grown daughters, lives in Coral Gables.

Mays Tapped to Fill Bench; West Tennessee District Court Short-Handed

By James Brosnan

The Commercial Appeal

Thursday, January, 24, 2002

President Bush Thursday nominated Memphis lawyer Hardy Mays to the depleted U.S. District Court for West Tennessee.

Mays, 54, is a partner at Baker Donelson Bearman and Caldwell, and is a former chief of staff to Gov. Don Sundquist.

The Mays nomination came almost two years after the death of Judge Jerome Turner and six months after Mays was recommended for the vacancy by Tennessee's two Republican senators, Fred Thompson and Bill Frist. The district court also has been further short-handed because of the forced six-month leave of absence of Judge Jon McCalla, who last year admitted "improper and intemperate conduct."

His absence has created more work for judges Bernice Donald and Julia Gibbons, who is awaiting Senate action on her nomination to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. The other district judge, James Todd, mostly hears cases in Jackson.

"I'm grateful the President has confidence in me and I hope to justify that," said Mays. "If and when the Senate sees fit to confirm me, I'm ready to go to work."

When the Senate will act is uncertain.

Thompson indicated Thursday he would like to press the Gibbons nomination first.

"We're going to work on it. We've got a big problem with the Sixth Circuit," said Thompson.

The Cincinnati appellate court is down to half its usual complement of 16 judges. None of Bush's nominees has been approved, in part because Michigan's Democratic senators have a "hold" on the Michigan nominees.

Nationwide, only one of Bush's 23 circuit court nominees has gotten a hearing from the Judiciary Committee, Sen. Don Nickles) (R-Okla.) noted Thursday.

Today, four liberal groups are expected to announce opposition to the nomination of U.S. Dist. Judge Charles Pickering of Laurel, Miss., to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Nominations

City News Service

Thursday, November 24, 2002

Two lawyers who are former federal prosecutors were nominated by President Bush for positions as U.S. District Court judges.

Bush yesterday named Percy Anderson, 52, a partner at Sonnenschein, Nath & Rosenthal, and John Walter, 57, senior partner at Walter, Finestone & Richter, a firm that he founded. They are the president's first nominations for the District Court in Los Angeles, which has six vacancies. There are 21 federal trial judges in Los Angeles.

Anderson and Walter were nominated for federal judgeships by Bush's father in 1992, but their nominations died without a hearing as the confirmation process ground to a halt in the closing months of the senior Bush's presidency, the Los Angeles Times reported.

Last year, Anderson and Walter were unanimously recommended for the judgeships by a six-member screening committee of both Democratic and Republican attorneys.

Anderson, born and raised in California, graduated from UCLA and UCLA Law School. He worked for two years at San Fernando Valley Legal Assistance before joining the U.S. attorney's office in 1979. Most recently, Anderson has done civil litigation and white-collar criminal defense work.

Walter, a native of Buffalo, N.Y., graduated from Loyola University and Loyola Law School. He was a federal prosecutor from 1970 to 1972. After his government service, he joined a large national firm before founding his own firm.

Bush Names 2 for Judgeships in L.A. Courts: The President's Picks Were Also Tapped By His Father, but no Hearings were Held

By Henry Weinstein
The Los Angeles Times
Thursday, January 24, 2001

President Bush on Wednesday nominated two Republican attorneys from Los Angeles who are former federal prosecutors for prestigious positions as U.S. District Court judges.

Bush tapped Percy Anderson, 52, a partner at Sonnenschein, Nath & Rosenthal, and John F. Walter, 57, senior partner at Walter, Finestone & Richter, a firm that he founded.

They are the president's first nominations for the District Court in Los Angeles, which has six vacancies and where judges are carrying heavy caseloads. There are 21 federal trial judges in Los Angeles. Anderson and Walter were nominated for federal judgeships by Bush's father in 1992, but their nominations died without a hearing as the confirmation process ground to a halt in the closing months of his presidency.

Last year, Anderson and Walter were unanimously recommended for the judgeships by a six-member screening committee of Democratic and Republican attorneys that was created by representatives of the Bush administration and California's two Democratic senators, Barbara Boxer and Dianne Feinstein.

The nominations were among 24 Bush sent to the Senate on Wednesday for judgeships around the country. In recent weeks, Bush has complained about the pace of the confirmation process. When the Senate adjourned Dec. 20, it had confirmed just 28 federal judges. Before Wednesday's action by Bush, there were 23 nominations to federal appeals courts and 14 nominations to District Courts. Both California senators issued statements praising the nominees, which should enhance their prospects for a swift confirmation, said Gerald Parsky, the West Los Angeles attorney who heads Bush's California judicial screening team.

"Mr. Walter and Mr. Anderson both demonstrated strong skills and qualifications to the advisory committee and this bodes well for the nomination process in the Senate," Feinstein said.

Boxer added: "Both are very well qualified to serve on the federal bench."

Walter, a native of Buffalo, N.Y., graduated from Loyola University and Loyola Law School. He was a federal prosecutor from 1970 to 1972 and obtained a conviction in a well-known case involving a group of sophisticated burglars who broke into a Laguna Niguel bank, rifled every safe deposit box and got away with millions of dollars. After his government service, Walter joined a large national law firm and then founded his firm, specializing in complex civil cases.

Anderson, born and raised in California, graduated from UCLA and UCLA Law School. He worked for two years at San Fernando Valley Neighborhood Legal Assistance before joining the U.S. attorney's office in 1979.

Perhaps his most noteworthy case as a government lawyer was the successful 1985 prosecution of Thomas P. Cavanaugh, an engineer who tried to sell the Soviets information about the U.S. Air Force's stealth technology, which makes airplanes invisible to radar. Cavanaugh received a life sentence.

Anderson recently has done civil litigation and white-collar criminal defense work. In addition, he served on the Christopher Commission, which investigated the Los Angeles Police Department in the aftermath of the 1992 riots.

Los Angeles attorney Jan L. Handzlik, who knows both nominees, said they deserve swift confirmation. "They were bridesmaids before," Handzlik said. "Hopefully, the ceremony will be completed this time."

Confirm Moderate Judges

By Bill Lakin
The Los Angeles Times
Thursday, January 24, 2002

The current impasse in the Senate approval of federal appellate court judges isn't about payback or politics, and it isn't a "game," as suggested in the headline of your Jan. 21 editorial, "Judgeship Game Cycles On." It's about not confirming judges who would set the country's laws back 200 years. The judicial nominees sent down by President Bush were handpicked by the ultra-right-wing Federalist Society, a group of lawyers so extreme they advocate rolling back the law to the 18th century. I don't believe these kinds of people should be part of our judiciary.

The Times recommends bringing all candidates to an immediate Senate confirmation vote. But that's only a short-term solution and won't fix the problem.

Bush should no longer rely on advice from his handlers and should stop being the front man for the Federalist Society. He should withdraw these nominations, go back to using the American Bar Assn.'s recommendations (as our past presidents did) and nominate moderates--Democrat or Republican.

The Leahy Detainees

The Washington Times
Thursday, January 24, 2001

President Bush is planning to place still more human beings into that punishing state of incarceration we've been hearing so much about of late, but Amnesty International won't be staging any protests. Nor will Ramsey Clark be filing suit. The shameful fact is that no human-rights group cares enough to speak out on behalf of this newest lot of detainees - judicial detainees, that is - and the Leahy limbo of neglect and stagnation they now prepare to enter. We used to call such people judicial nominees, but that was back when the federal judicial confirmation process had a beginning, a middle and an end. Since Sen. Patrick Leahy, Vermont Democrat, assumed control of the Judiciary Committee gavel, however, the process has undergone a few fundamental changes. The beginning remains reassuringly the same: Mr. Leahy still allows the president to appoint judges to the federal bench, which is really quite accommodating of him when you think about it. But the middle (the committee hearing) is a dicey thing, and the end (the floor vote) is nowhere in sight. Hence the change in terminology from judicial nominee to Leahy detainee.

It could be that one day we look back upon the Democratic delaying tactics of the last session and see a game of "Mother, May I" next to the mass obstructionism Senate Democrats seem to have in store for the new Congress. Since the president appointed Otto Reich assistant secretary of state for Western Hemisphere affairs and Eugene Scalia solicitor of the Labor Department earlier this month - after Mr. Reich was "detained" for some nine months by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee without a hearing, and Mr. Scalia was denied a floor vote by Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle - the rhetoric among Senate Democrats regarding all White House appointees, from ambassadors to humanitarian aid workers to judges, has become downright alarming. As Sen. Joseph Biden put it on NBC's "Meet the Press," even before Mr. Bush made the two recess appointments, several Democratic senators came to him and said, "Communicate to the president that if he does this, we will retaliate with regard to the rest of his nominations."

Sounds like tough-guy, take-no-prisoners talk. But whose side are the Democrats on? By refusing to confirm assorted key players on Mr. Bush's foreign policy team, and by refusing to move forward on dozens of federal judicial nominees urgently needed to fill a precarious 11 percent (and growing) vacancy rate in the federal judiciary, Senate Democrats cannot be said to be fighting for the American people. They are fighting for themselves and their prerogatives - not exactly the noblest causes up for grabs at the moment - and if they win, the country loses. Meanwhile, scores of Americans, willing and able to serve their country, will only be able to serve time.

Bench Politics: Senate Stalls on Judges Who Would Uphold the Constitution

By Roger Pilon

The CATO Institute

Monday, January 21, 2002

Should the Senate Judiciary Committee grill nominees for the federal courts about their ideology and then reject those who fail an ideological litmus test? The implications are breathtaking. Yet Senate Democrats appear prepared to do that-or to reject nominees outright, without a hearing, based simply on their perceived "ideology."

The roots of this effort are deep, going back a century, but the proximate cause is Bush v. Gore. Just after the decision came down, the legal academy, overwhelmingly Democratic if not leftist, exploded in a torrent of anger. Some 550 professors from 120 law schools ran a full-page ad in The New York Times a year ago claiming that the Court's majority had acted as "political proponents for candidate Bush, not as judges." In op-eds, articles, books, and TV appearances, the venom poured forth. Yale Law School's Bruce Ackerman went so far as to urge Senate Democrats to reject every judicial nominee that the illegitimate President George W. Bush offered up.

They haven't done that, but they're certainly in a confirmation stall. Since Bush took office, there have been 128 vacancies on the 862-member Article III courts. To date, Bush has nominated 65 candidates to fill those vacancies. Only 28 have been confirmed, leaving 100 empty seats, 39 of which are judicial emergency vacancies according to the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. On the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit, half the seats today are empty.

In fact, the stall is most evident at the circuit level. Only six of Bush's 29 circuit court nominees have been confirmed, and two of those were Clinton holdovers, re-nominated as a gesture to the Democrats. More telling still, 11 of those nominees have been hanging since May, never having had a hearing, much less a vote.

And we're not talking here about political hacks. Miguel Estrada, Michael McConnell, John Roberts Jr., Jeffrey Sutton-those are just some of the stellar appellate nominees whose names have been before the Senate since May. Their problem, it seems, is that they cannot get through the Democrats ideological filter. Those are some of the same Democrats, recall, who condemned Reagan Republicans for their alleged use of a pro-life litmus test, despite having no evidence of the practice.

What is plain now is that it's not the use of a litmus test that troubles Democrats, but the content of such a test. And they're not at all reluctant to give evidence of their own test.

‘CORE VALUES’ REVEALED

Last June, Sen. Charles Schumer, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight and the Courts, wrote an op-ed for The New York Times, "Judging by Ideology," which appeared on the same day he held hearings on whether ideology should play a role in the selection and confirmation of judges. He concluded it should, to no one's surprise. In fact, Schumer gave us a three-part test for determining when to invoke ideology: "the extent to which the president himself makes his initial selections on the basis of a particular ideology, the composition of the courts at the time of the nomination and the political climate of the day." One looks in vain for bright lines in that test.

Schumer's aim, however, is clear. It is, expressly, to keep conservatives like Justices Antonio Scalia and Clarence Thomas off our courts. "The Supreme Court's recent 5-4 decisions that constrain Congressional power," Schumer wrote, "are probably the best evidence that the court is dominated by conservatives." Thus, "tilting the court further to the right would push our court sharply away from the core values held by most of our country's citizens."

Never mind, apparently, what the law might say about the scope of congressional power-or anything else, for that matter. What counts, rather, is our citizens' "core values."

That glimpse of the Democratic agenda was embellished two months later, again just prior to another Schumer hearing on ideology, when party elder Joseph Califano Jr. wrote an op-ed for The Washington Post, "Yes, Litmus-Test Judges." Complaining that gridlock and big money have long kept Congress from legislating on a wide range of urgent matters, Califano noted that concerned citizens have been petitioning the courts with matters they once took to the political branches, making the courts "increasingly powerful architects of public policy."

Indeed, "who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget" or virtually anything else today in Washington. For we've all learned, Califano continued, "that what can't be won in the legislative or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits." "The Senate, therefore, needs to decide, on explicitly ideological grounds, who will be "setting national policy" from the bench.

There you have it. Everything is politics. Nothing is principle. Judges don't simply apply law. Sympathetic judges make law, like so many legislators, setting national policy in the process.

Meanwhile, our nominal legislators in the Senate are reduced to vetting our true rulers.

Interestingly, the Constitution, which spells out the actual separation of powers, is mentioned not once in Califano's piece. Doubtless, it is an embarrassment, utterly inconsistent with his picture of a thoroughly politicized judiciary.

LOSING SIGHT OF LIMITS

Yet for all that, Califano's picture is too close to the truth to be ignored. He's put his finger on just why the confirmation battles today loom so large. What he and his Democratic colleagues have failed to do, however, is explain, much less justify, this flight from constitutional principle. To get at that, we have to go further back.

The main origins of the problem lie in the Progressive Era, when the social engineers of the time often sought to do through government what the Constitution plainly left to the private sector. Things came to a head during the New Deal when a frustrated Franklin Roosevelt attempted to pack the Supreme Court. The scheme failed, but FDR won the day when a cowed Court began rethinking the Constitution, effectively eviscerating constitutional limits on federal power.

Although the Court that emerged was called "restrained"-by virtue of its deference to the political branches-it was in truth, activist-finding congressional and executive powers nowhere granted, ignoring rights plainly in the Constitution. And the Court's rethinking led ineluctably to a general shift of power to the judicial branch. The shift had two aspects. First, with the political branches now free to rule almost every aspect of our lives, it was only a matter of time before their ever-expanding product ended up in the courts, with the courts asked to sort out the mess that Congress was making. But those who promoted such schemes didn't always win in the political branches. Thus, second, when they lost, they turned increasingly to the courts, trying to win from sympathetic judges what they had failed to win politically. And the Earl Warren and Warren Burger Courts, already deferring to the political pursuit of "social justice," were only too willing to step into the fray, thinking themselves a legislature of nine.

The Rehnquist Court, by contrast, has taken modest steps over the past decade toward resurrecting constitutional principles of limited government. However modest, those steps have alarmed liberal Democrats. They can't imagine anyone thinking that Congress' powers are limited; that if an end is worthy, Congress still might not have the power to pursue it; that James Madison might have meant it when he said that the powers of the new government would be "few and defined."

Thus, when Democrats seek today to subject judicial nominees to an ideological litmus test, they're continuing the work of an earlier generation of their party. The test they would impose has little to do with law or with the ideology of the Constitution-a document understood for 150 years as having instituted limited government. Rather, it has to do with whether the nominee subscribes to the version of the Constitution that the 1937-38 Court invented to allow the modern welfare state to bloom. That version, which encourages judges both to ignore limits on power and to find rights nowhere to be found, requires a judge to be sensitive to "evolving social values"- sometimes even before they've evolved.

Having earlier Politicized the Constitution, Democrats are now bent on politicizing the judiciary. If they succeed, it will mark the triumph of ideology and the death of law.

There is a Purpose to Compromise in Judicial Nominations

By Evan Schultz
The Fulton County Daily Report
Wednesday, January 23, 2002

Michael McConnell, meet Judith McConnell. Or, as their most venomous critics might say, will the highfalutin homophobe please come on over and give a big "howdy-do" to the pervert-loving home-wrecker?

These two lawyers (no relationship, according to Judith) have something in common besides their last names: Both have been put through the wringer after being tapped for federal judgeships. No doubt, it's sad to see distinguished jurists smeared in the name of upholding the Constitution. But maybe there's also something reassuring about it (really).

First, a bit more about the unhappy couple. Judith was nominated in 1994 by President Bill Clinton to be a federal district judge in California. Michael was nominated by President George W. Bush last May for a seat on the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Michael is one of the country's pre-eminent constitutional scholars. Now a professor at the University of Utah College of Law, he previously taught law at the University of Chicago, clerked for Justice William Brennan Jr., and has received endorsements from across the ideological spectrum.

Judith is a widely respected judge who, at the time of her nomination in 1994, had served on the bench of the state superior court in San Diego for 15 years. She had support from the state's conservative chief justice and was named San Diego's judge of the year by one group of lawyers in 1991.

Michael McConnell has drawn fire for advocating a vigorous role for religion in American public life, and for helping the Boy Scouts of America successfully argue in the Supreme Court that they should be allowed to exclude homosexuals.

Judith McConnell was savaged for a 1987 opinion in which she agreed with a 16-year-old boy's wish to live with his dead father's gay partner rather than with his mother. Clinton withdrew support for Judith when Senate Republicans opposed her. Bush is still backing Michael, but the Democratic-controlled Senate has not scheduled a hearing for him.

These situations should make all thinking people shiver. We've perfected the politics of destruction to the point where we slander the sterling records and distort the complex thinking of those who strive to serve the common good. Shame on us. Right?

Not necessarily. The nomination process isn't pretty. But it still serves a crucial purpose:

ensuring that no one branch of government, political party or ideology dominates the judiciary.

Yes, No, No, Yes

Since New Year's, the news here in Washington has been drawn back to the fight over judicial nominations between the Senate and the president. Republican senators (Orrin Hatch of Utah leading the charge) have been beating up on the Democrats for stalling by pointing to what Republicans claim is the small percentage of Bush's judicial nominees on whom the Senate has voted and the large number of vacancies on the federal bench.

At the same time, Democrats (led by Patrick Leahy of Vermont) have insisted that they confirmed a record number of judges in 2001. All this, of course, follows six years of the reverse-the Senate Republicans obstructing while the Democratic president complained.

The statistics, though, cloud the real issue. And that, simply put, is whether the administration backs nominees whom the Senate will approve.

The Constitution gives the president the role of playing offense ("he shall nominate ... Judges of the supreme court, and ... all other Officers of the United States"). And it gives the Senate the job of defense (giving "Advice and Consent"). The historical argument rages over how much power each side should have.

On the one hand, Alexander Hamilton stated in The Federalist No. 66 that "There will, of course, be no exertion of CHOICE on the part of the Senate." On the other hand, the Senate rejected one quarter of presidents' choices for the Supreme Court during the nation's first 100 years, including one of George Washington's nominees for chief justice.

At this point, the situation can be summarized pretty simply. The president can nominate whatever geniuses or morons he wants. And the Senate (or at least the party in charge of the Senate) can let them rot. It's a system that demands negotiating-even more so when the two branches are controlled by different parties. That's especially true for this Senate, with its precarious majority, and this president, with his controversial election.

Unfortunately for the McConnells, that's where the mudslinging comes in. All senators say they want moderate nominees. Whenever they obstruct, they claim that it's only because the president has sent rabid extremists-or, more often, they simply refuse to move the nominees as others fling the accusations.

Listen Up, Mr. President

Harsh as it may be, the rhetoric serves an important role-it signals to the president exactly how much leeway he has. It also tells the president when he needs to sit down and talk to the Senate before going forward.

As former Clinton Justice Department official Eleanor Acheson says, some presidents can be very insistent "that this is the choice of the president, that 'I will reserve to myself the final choice.' "

Some presidents have a more soft view of that, namely, they can be pretty easily swayed by a strong pitch made by a senator. And some presidents can do both, depending on who they need to be doing business with when the vacancy arises, and depending on the merits of the candidate. So things can be very varied."

Clinton apparently didn't have a tin ear-he withdrew nine nominees in the face of opposition. The result? Despite Bob Dole's claims during the 1996 presidential campaign that Clinton had established a "judicial hall of shame," an academic study of Clinton's judges pegged their rulings from the bench as just a bit more liberal than those of Gerald Ford's judges.

And, so far at least, Bush seems to be following suit. Despite the roar of protest that greeted Michael McConnell and a few other Bush nominees (Miguel Estrada and Jeffrey Sutton, in particular), the first batch, at least, of Bush's nominees was called "more eclectic and conciliatory than most people expected" by The New York Times.

And, as Leahy likes to point out, the Senate has responded by confirming 28 judges, more than it approved in the first year of either the Clinton or the first Bush administration.

So the more the Senate signals the president by accusing a select few nominees of witchcraft, the more the president gets the message that he needs to consult and compromise with the Senate. The upside is that everyone can take credit for appointing "moderate" judges.

As Abner Mikva, former chief judge of the D.C. Circuit, said while serving as Clinton's White House counsel, "Get a good judge, and he'll be good for all seasons."

The downside, though, is the risk of creating a judiciary that, though competent, doesn't shine. As legal commentator Jeffrey Rosen lamented about Clinton's nominees, "there are few standouts. They are largely a group of soldierly and obscure judges and prosecutors."

And the temptation to nominate such people is strong no matter who's in the White House. For instance, look at the 11th Circuit. Clinton's last appointment to that court was Charles Wilson, a former state judge, federal magistrate and U.S. attorney. Bush's first nominee to the same circuit? William Steele, now a federal magistrate in Alabama.

There are two ways around this. One is to nominate as many creative, original thinkers as possible who, by consensus, still count as moderates. Clinton's successful choice of former Yale Law School Dean Guido Calabresi for the 2nd Circuit was along these lines. (Calabresi was confirmed by unanimous consent.)

The other solution lies in the sort of quiet confirmation vote that took place last November for another controversial Bush nominee-Edith Brown Clement. Clement is a member of the Federalist Society whom the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League has

Judicial Nominations Battle Resume

By Jesse Holland
Associated Press
Thursday, January 24, 2002

Judicial nomination politics are back in full swing just two days into a new congressional year.

Liberal groups are preparing attacks on one of President Bush's appellate court nominees, U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, just as Republicans renew pressure on Democratic senators to move the president's nominees into the 101 vacancies in the federal judiciary system.

Bush on Wednesday added 24 more U.S. District Court nominees to the 66 U.S. Appeals and District Court nominations that the Senate has not yet decided on. Republicans have complained that Democrats stalled Bush's judicial nominees after taking over the Senate in June, confirming just 28 of the president's first 94 nominations. Democrats say they moved as fast as they could, and that Republicans delayed former President Clinton's judicial nominees during his two terms in office.

Republicans say Pickering is a prime example of how Democrats have treated Bush's nominees.

"He's a classic case of how the committee has kicked the can down the road: 'Oh well, yes, we've had one hearing; we may need another one. Oh well, he got all his opinions; how about his unpublished opinions? Oh, by the way, how about his secretaries' notes?'" said Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss. "This is unnecessary and ridiculous harassment."

Bush nominated Pickering to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans in May. But Democratic senators have been lobbied for months to block or stop the nomination.

The nominee, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering, R-Miss., already had one nomination hearing in October, but Democrats have insisted on a second hearing to study his unpublished opinions on civil, reproductive and prisoner rights.

L.A. Warren of the Mississippi branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said his group believes Pickering gave false testimony during his 1990 confirmation hearing to become a U.S. district judge.

criticized. Yet the Senate approved her by a vote of 99-0.

And for certain confirmable but controversial nominees, Senate opponents still could make their point by letting the fight spill to the floor. The nominee wins-with bruises. This might happen to Michael McConnell.

Moderation in Moderation

Which is to say, getting a moderate judiciary does not mean getting a judiciary composed only of moderates. The vote on Clement shows that the Senate knows this. So does a comment by Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., in hearings he called last year on the role of ideology in judicial selections. He said, "Having one or even two justices like (Antonin) Scalia and (Clarence) Thomas might be legitimate because it provides the (Supreme) Court with a particular view of constitutional jurisprudence. But having four or five or nine justices like them would skew the court."

This approach-of approving some novel thinkers mixed in with many more middle-of-the-road judges-has the advantage of keeping the bench stable. At least as important, it respects both the ideological characteristics of judging and the constitutional power of the president.

And it opens the way for horse trading: The Senate will approve some Clements if Bush nominates some Clinton choices (as he did with Roger Gregory, whom Clinton had put on the 4th Circuit though a recess appointment) and/or lots of Steeles.

Even better, the approach probably makes for good government-at least the best hope for good government we have in this world. As a recent New Yorker profile summarized the views of 7th Circuit Judge Richard Posner on judicial selections, "One individual judge, Posner reasons, will never be able to put aside his personal disgusts and instincts, so the trick is to have lots of different judges whose instincts clash, and hope that, in the end, their views will cancel out in such a way as to approximate fairness."

The result, the New Yorker article conceded, may not be fair to any particular litigant. It also might have noted that the result is not fair to any particular judicial nominee. But that's the price of living in a diverse society with a government of checks and balances. And it's the pain of being a McConnell.

Senator Feinstein Statement on Nominations

Senator Feinstein Press Release

Wednesday, January 23, 2002

The nomination by President Bush of Percy Anderson and John Walter to the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California marks the first two nominations to emerge from a bipartisan screening process to fill open judicial positions in California. These nominees both received 6-0 votes from the Judicial Advisory Committee that was established through an agreement Senator Barbara Boxer and I reached with the White House. In achieving these unanimous votes, Mr. Walter and Mr. Anderson both demonstrated strong skills and qualifications to the Advisory Committee and this bodes well for the nomination process in the Senate. I am hopeful that a hearing will be held by the Judiciary Committee at an early date. I also look forward to early White House action to fill the remaining open seats in California: four more in the Central District and one each in the Eastern and Northern Districts.

Percy Anderson is a partner at the national law firm of Sonnenshine, Nath & Rosenthal, in its Los Angeles office. He received his BA and JD degrees from UCLA, graduating from the law school in 1975. He worked as a Staff Attorney and then Directing Attorney for San Fernando Legal Services from 1975 - 1979. He then became an Assistant U.S. Attorney, specializing in criminal litigation. Within that office, he also acted as First Assistant Division Chief and Chief of the Criminal Complaints Unit. In 1985, he left the U.S. Attorney's Office and went into private practice at the Los Angeles office of Bryan, Cave, McPheeters & McRoberts, then at the Sonnenshine firm.

John Walter is a name partner at the Los Angeles law firm of Walter, Finestone & Richter. He received his bachelor's and law degrees from Loyola University, graduating from the law school in 1969 and being admitted to the bar in 1970. After graduation, he worked at Kindel & Anderson from 1969-70, then spent two years at an Assistant U.S. Attorney in the criminal division before returning to Kindel & Anderson. He formed his own firm in 1976 and practices civil and criminal litigation.

The Judicial Advisory Committee is comprised of four six-member subcommittees -- one for each judicial district in the state. Each subcommittee has one member selected by Senator Boxer, one selected by me and one jointly by both Senator Boxer and myself along with three members named by Gerald Parsky, President Bush's State Chair for judicial appointments.

People's for Neas, Other Progressive Leaders Urge Senate Judiciary Committee to Reject Appeals Court Nominee Charles Pickering

By Ralph Neas
People for the American Way
January 24, 2002

People For the American Way President Ralph G. Neas called on the Senate Judiciary Committee to reject the nomination of Charles W. Pickering, Sr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit and released a detailed report documenting Pickering's troubling public record on a range of critical issues. At a press conference with other progressive leaders, Neas said PFAW and other groups would launch a grassroots effort against Pickering's nomination, making this the first major judicial confirmation battle of the Bush administration.

"Achieving ideological domination of the federal judiciary is the top goal of right-wing activists inside and outside the Bush administration, and judges like Charles Pickering are the means to that end," said Neas. "Many of our basic rights and freedoms are at risk. The Senate Judiciary Committee should review Judge Pickering's record and reject his elevation to the appeals court."

Neas said Pickering's record makes him an especially problematic choice for the 5th Circuit, which presides over a three-state area with the largest and most diverse minority population in any Circuit in the country, and which has already decided a number of cases restricting civil and reproductive rights.

The PFAW report released today examines Pickering's public record both before and after he became a judge. Among the report's conclusions:

His record demonstrates insensitivity and even hostility toward key principles and remedies that now safeguard civil rights, and indifference toward the problems caused by laws and institutions that have previously created and perpetuated discrimination.

Even conservative appellate court judges have reversed Judge Pickering on a number of occasions for disregarding controlling precedent on constitutional rights and for improperly denying people access to the courts.

He has been a staunch opponent of women's reproductive rights.

He has demonstrated a disregard for the separation of church and state by repeatedly using his position on the bench to promote involvement in religious programs.

"Elevating Pickering to a powerful appellate court position would give him enormous influence on the interpretation of statutory and constitutional provisions that safeguard the rights of all Americans," concludes the report.

Neas noted that the report released today is based on an incomplete record of Judge Pickering's tenure on the District Court, because Pickering has told the Senate Judiciary Committee that approximately 40 percent of his unpublished opinions – as many as 400 – are not available.

"We don't know what's in those missing rulings," said Neas, "but the rulings we do have make it clear that Pickering has opposed basic principles protecting civil rights and has sought to limit their application. He has even denigrated people who have turned to the courts to protect their civil rights."

Pickering has, for example, criticized the fundamental "one-person, one-vote" principle recognized by the Supreme Court under the Fourteenth Amendment. He has also criticized or sought to limit important remedies provided by the Voting Rights Act.

As a state senator, Pickering supported voting-related measures that helped perpetuate discrimination against African Americans, and voted to appropriate money to fund the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, a notorious agency created by the state in 1956 to resist desegregation. At his 1990 confirmation hearing, Pickering testified that he had never had any contact with the Sovereignty Commission. But PFAW's report notes that a 1972 memorandum by a Commission investigator to its Director stated that "Senator Charles Pickering" and two other state legislators were "very interested" in a Commission investigation into union activity that had resulted in a strike against a large employer in Pickering's home town.

The report also notes that Pickering did not take the opportunity at his confirmation hearings to repudiate a 1959 article he wrote as a law student advising the state legislature how to fix the state's law criminalizing interracial marriage in response to a state Supreme Court ruling that had rendered the law unenforceable. The legislature took his advice.

The report also cites specific instances in which Pickering was overturned by the 5th Circuit, to which he has been nominated, for violating "well-settled principles of law" involving constitutional issues, civil rights, criminal procedure or labor issues. For example, the conservative 5th Circuit has reversed Pickering's misuse of "dismissal with prejudice" – a severe sanction – against an inmate alleging civil rights violations and against a group of plaintiffs in a toxic torts case against a chemical company.

The report documents Pickering's use of his judicial position to promote religion and religious ministries to those coming before his court. It also documents a decades-long hostility to reproductive choice, including his advocacy of a constitutional amendment to ban abortion.

Neas said the grassroots effort to defeat Pickering's nomination would be the first of many unless

President Bush engages in genuine bipartisan dialogue with members of the Senate. Neas urged senators, especially members of the Judiciary Committee, to fulfill their constitutional responsibilities to carefully scrutinize judicial nominees and reject those who have not demonstrated a commitment to upholding civil rights.

"Right-wing senators perpetuated dozens of appeals court vacancies by carrying out an unprecedented ideological blockade against judges nominated by President Clinton," said Neas. "Now they hope President Bush will take advantage of those vacancies to fill the appeals courts with right-wing nominees like Charles Pickering."

Neas noted that 35 percent of President Clinton's appellate court nominees were blocked from 1995-2000; 45 percent failed to receive a vote in the congressional session during which they were nominated. Republican-nominated judges currently hold a majority on seven of the 13 circuit courts of appeal. If all President Bush's current nominees are approved, such judges will make up a majority on 11 circuit courts. And by the end of 2004, Republican-appointed judges could make up a majority on every one of the 13 circuit courts of appeals.

"A federal judiciary completely dominated by right-wing judges would be a disaster for Americans' rights and freedoms," said Neas. "Senators must be willing to say no to Judge Pickering and they must be willing to say no to right-wing efforts to pack the federal judiciary."

Statement of Kate Michelman Announcing Opposition to Judicial Nominee Charles Pickering.

NARAL

Tuesday, January 22, 2002

Good morning, thank you for coming here today. As you know, this coalition has gathered today to announce our opposition to the nomination by President Bush of Charles Pickering to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Charles Pickering's nomination by President Bush is part of a continuing effort to hasten the reversal of Roe and the end of legal abortion. A lifetime appointment to the Court of Appeals for Charles Pickering may lead to a lifetime of disappointment and hardship for women seeking to exercise their constitutional right to choose.

Pickering's record on choice is crystal clear -- during his lifetime as a conservative political activist, Pickering has demonstrated open hostility to a woman's right to choose and has sought to reverse Roe through a constitutional amendment to ban abortion. This fact alone must disqualify him from sitting on the Fifth Circuit - a court that has done more than most courts in recent years to limit that fundamental right.

The Fifth Circuit is one of the most critical courts in the United States to the future of reproductive rights for women. This Circuit - consisting of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas -- reviews legislation from an area of the country that is particularly hostile to a woman's right to choose. It is at the center of attempts by state legislatures to restrict abortion and limit women's ability to exercise their constitutionally protected rights under Roe. Indeed, since 1995, the three states in the Fifth Circuit have introduced nearly 175 measures to restrict abortion rights.

The Fifth Circuit has eroded the exercise of choice in prior decisions, and poses a continued threat to these rights in the future. Confirming Pickering would add fuel to the ultra-conservative fire on this court for decades. It's the wrong court for Charles Pickering. And Charles Pickering is the wrong nominee for this court. Close scrutiny of Charles Pickering's record over the last four decades shows someone who should not be confirmed for a circuit court judgeship.

Pickering's career has been notable, not for his record as a judge or as a legal scholar, but as a partisan political activist. Pickering has been at the front lines on some of the most divisive political issues of our time, and repeatedly has pursued a far-right conservative agenda that demonstrates hostility toward reproductive choice, individual rights, and disdain for a federal court system that serves as a guardian of those rights.

As a Mississippi state legislator, he called for a constitutional convention to propose an amendment banning abortion. As Chairman of the Human Rights and Responsibilities subcommittee of the Republican Platform Committee in 1976, he led the fight to have the Republican Party adopt a constitutional amendment to ban abortion in the party platform. That was a major step in providing anti-choice forces a powerful national vehicle through which to organize a roll back of this core right for American women. And while President of the Mississippi Baptist Convention, the organization adopted a resolution calling for legislation to ban abortion except to save the life of the woman.

One hallmark of our free society is the independence of the federal judiciary from politics. This independence allows the federal courts to protect constitutional rights free of political interference - especially important in the area of reproductive choice. Pickering showed little willingness to respect judicial independence - as a Senator, he was eager to amend the Constitution when he disagreed with decisions by the federal courts. In the Mississippi Senate, Pickering co-sponsored legislation calling for a constitutional amendment limiting the tenure of federal judges, and voted for a constitutional amendment to limit federal judges to six-year terms.

He also supported holding constitutional conventions to pass amendments to reverse desegregation and separation of church and state court decisions.

Clearly, he wishes to create a federal judiciary that responds to ultra-conservative political pressure, rather than one which independently interprets the laws and the constitution. Freed from the limitations of the district court, Pickering would be in a position to use a Fifth Circuit seat as a vehicle for his own judicial activism -- where his disdain for precedent and for plaintiffs with the temerity to assert their own civil rights would have broader ramifications. Pickering's career is marked by conservative political activism, not by thoughtful legal jurisprudence.

Because of the large caseload in the federal courts, circuit courts are increasingly for most people the courts of last resort. A die-hard conservative activist with strongly held views on critical constitutional issues, Pickering is exactly the wrong kind of person to serve on an appellate court so pivotal to the lives of so many women.

The Senate's proper role is to consider a nominee's views, and to reject those judges who would roll back the rights of women. The Constitution provides for this and the American people want their Senators to exercise advice as well as consent.

We are issuing a report today to help educate our members on the need to oppose this nomination. We also call on Senators to read our report to understand how critical this nomination is to the future of reproductive freedom and choice. And we trust once they do, they will understand how critical it is for them to reject this nomination.

LCCR Opposes Pickering Nomination to Fifth Circuit- Serious Concerns About Nominee's Civil Rights Record

Leadership Conference on Civil Rights
Thursday, January 24, 2002

Wade Henderson, Executive Director, Leadership Conference on Civil Rights (LCCR), issued the following statement today regarding President Bush's nomination of Judge Charles W. Pickering, Sr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit:

"Although I am honored to join my colleagues this morning in defending the integrity of the federal courts, I regret that today's action has been made necessary by the nomination of an individual to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals whose background, actions and temperament render him unsuitable for elevation to this most important court.

As we know, the federal courts often are called the guardians of the Constitution because their rulings protect the rights and liberties guaranteed by this most hallowed of documents. For many Americans, the federal judiciary is the first line of defense against violations of dearly held constitutional principles; for others, it is the last bastion of hope in a system that has marginalized, mistreated or simply ignored them.

The Leadership Conference strongly believes that the composition of the federal judiciary is a civil rights issue of profound importance to all Americans, because the individuals charged with dispensing justice in our society have a direct impact on civil rights protections for us all.

As such, the federal judiciary must be perceived by the public as an instrument of justice, and the individuals who are selected for this branch of government must be the embodiment of fairness and impartiality.

Our exhaustive and careful review of Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr.'s public record -- from law student to state legislator to judge, as well as the presentations we have heard today, have left us with little alternative but to oppose his nomination because of his extreme views on important civil rights, women's rights and constitutional issues.

When taken together, these immoderate positions ought to disqualify Judge Pickering from serious consideration for any federal Circuit, much less the important 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

It is especially important to note that we are discussing this nominee in the context of the Circuit to which he has been appointed. With Mississippi, Texas and Louisiana, the Fifth Circuit has the largest percentage of people of color of any Circuit Court in the country. Unquestionably, much is at stake when it comes to civil rights.

Historically, the Fifth Circuit was the Circuit of "Unlikely Heroes," who in the face of much opposition, issued scores of important opinions that in effect desegregated the South. This is the Circuit of:

John Minor Wisdom who ordered that James Meredith to be admitted to the University of Mississippi;

Richard Rives who outlawed segregation on the Montgomery city buses;

Elbert Tuttle who ordered the integration of the University of Georgia and struck down Louisiana's segregated pupil placement laws; and finally,

John Brown who, in U.S. v. Mississippi, wrote that "no nation can survive if it flagrantly denies its citizens the right to vote."

Today, the Fifth Circuit is dramatically different. It is now one of, if not the most hostile appellate courts in the country when it comes to civil rights. The Fifth Circuit is now the Hopwood Court that refused to apply Bakke to college admissions, impacting educational opportunities for black and brown students. The Fifth Circuit is now the Reeves Court that issued an opinion about the "intent" standard in employment discrimination cases so extreme it was overturned by the Supreme Court, 9-0. The Fifth circuit is the LULAC v. Clements court that held that the Voting rights Act does not apply to at-large judicial elections; again, an opinion so extreme, it was reversed by the U.S. Supreme court.

After our careful review of Judge Pickering's record -- on and off the bench -- we are forced to conclude that he is the wrong man for the Fifth Circuit. This Circuit requires a jurist who will have a moderating influence on the Court. We urge the Senate to consider all of these circumstances and to exercise its constitutional prerogative to reject this nominee cries out for moderation. And we implore President Bush to nominate a moderate for this critical position.

The Case Against the Confirmation of Charles W. Pickering, Sr.

Independent Judiciary

According to Senate records reviewed by The Associated Press, Pickering testified he "never had any contact with the Sovereignty Commission," Mississippi's now-defunct segregation watchdog agency. However, a 1972 letter in the commission's files said Pickering, while a state senator, had "requested to be advised" by the commission about a group organizing pulpwood workers.

Pickering said it would inappropriate for him to comment until his next hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

People for the American Way, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the Alliance for Justice and the National Abortion Rights Action League are among the groups planning to speak out against Pickering in Washington Thursday.

John Nowacki, deputy director for the conservative Free Congress Foundation's Center for Law and Democracy, said Pickering is a good choice.

"They're trying to find something to latch onto to oppose nominees and they think they can pull this off," he said. "With Pickering, they think that they have something to hang their hats on, but when you look at it and look at it closely, there's really nothing there."

Bush's Picks for Courts Under Attack

By Tom Brune

Newsday

Thursday, January 24, 2002

The fight over President George W. Bush's choices for federal judgeships, waged behind the scenes since the Sept. 11 attacks, will resurface today as liberal groups declare their first open war on a Bush judicial nomination.

The liberals' target is Charles Pickering, a conservative Mississippi federal judge nominated to fill a vacancy on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals who also is a friend and political ally of Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.). "This is likely to be the opening round in the judicial nomination battle," said Elliot Minberg of People for the American Way, one of the liberal groups that will hold a news conference today to urge the Senate to reject Pickering's nomination.

Pickering is just one of many of Bush's judicial nominees criticized as too conservative by People for the American Way and its allies; he became the first target because Lott is pushing hard for a hearing and confirmation vote, Minberg said.

Lott yesterday called for Pickering's confirmation by Presidents Day, Feb. 18. "He's eminently qualified, supported by a broad group of individuals in our state, including minorities and women and plaintiff's attorneys and defense attorneys, and Republicans and Democrats," Lott said.

Even though the nation's attention was riveted on the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and the government's frantic follow-up last fall, the ideological battle over Bush's judicial nominations quietly but heatedly continued in the background in the Senate.

Bush has proved to be particularly eager to put his stamp on the federal court, which has more than 100 vacancies, or about 12 percent of the total judgeships.

Yesterday, Bush announced 24 new judicial nominations, bringing his total to 90 during his first year in office. That is much faster than most of his recent predecessors.

Twenty-eight of the nominees have been confirmed by the Senate, all but four of them since Sept. 11, after passing through the Senate Judiciary Committee controlled by Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), according to a tally kept by the Justice Department.

The nominations, hearings and confirmations have been fraught with political infighting and dramatic gestures.

Last fall, as the U.S. war on terrorism hit high gear, Senate Republicans led by Lott took a break to make speeches condemning Democrats for not moving fast enough on Bush's choices for judges. Republicans even temporarily blocked the foreign appropriations bill sponsored by Leahy to force Democrats to move more quickly.

Meanwhile, Leahy attempted to demonstrate his willingness to move ahead by holding a hearing on Pickering even though the Senate office buildings closed that day because of the anthrax scare. The hearing was held in the Capitol.

Committee Democrats forced Pickering to provide more information and go through a second hearing because he has published only 95 opinions in 11 years on the bench. That's too few to determine his qualifications, said Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.).

Republicans charged that Democrats were influenced by liberal groups.

Pickering should be blocked because he "has a troubling record on civil rights and reproductive choice" that is "emblematic" of Bush nominees, according to Alliance for Justice.

Leahy's committee is expected to hold a second hearing on Pickering the first week of February.

President Picks Local Jurist for New Federal Judgeship

By Jon Burstein and Rafael Lorente

Sun-Sentinel

Thursday, January 24, 2002

A Palm Beach County Circuit judge is one step closer to taking a seat on the federal bench.

Circuit Judge Kenneth Marra was one of 24 judicial nominees for slots nationwide whose names were forwarded Wednesday by President Bush to Capitol Hill. The president has picked Marra to fill a newly created judgeship for the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida. "I am humbled and honored by President Bush's nomination of me to a position on the United States District Court," Marra said in a statement. "I look forward to completing the nomination process before the United States Senate and to the many challenges that await me as a United States District Judge."

Bush also nominated Miami lawyer Jose Martinez to replace Senior U.S. District Judge Edward Davis in Miami.

Both nominees went through the 22-member Southern District Judicial Nominating Commission chaired by former Gov. Bob Martinez. They also have been interviewed and approved by Florida's Democratic U.S. Sens. Bob Graham and Bill Nelson.

Support from home-state senators is crucial for nominees to successfully navigate the confirmation process.

"Given their qualifications and with the support of those two home-state senators, I'm confident they will be confirmed quickly," said Alberto Gonzalez, White House legal counsel.

Gonzalez said there is one more empty seat in the southern district that the White House hopes to fill soon.

The lifetime appointments pay $150,000 a year.

Marra, 50, has been a circuit judge since 1996, serving in the civil, family and criminal divisions. Before that, he spent 12 years practicing commercial litigation with the law firm of Nason, Gildan, Yeager, Gerson & White.

The New York City native got an undergraduate degree from State University of New York, Stony Brook in 1973. He graduated first in his class at Stetson University College of Law in St. Petersburg in 1977.

Liberals Challenge Judicial Nominee; Argue Bush Would 'Pack' Courts With Foes of Civil Rights

By Audrey Hudson
The Washington Times
Thursday, January 24, 2002

Liberal groups today will highlight the record of a conservative judge as part of their campaign to tarnish President Bush's judicial nominees as right-wingers who will "seriously threaten the rights of all Americans."

Such organizations as People for the American Way, the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League, the Alliance for Justice and the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights plan a press conference on the "problematic record" of Mississippi District Judge Charles W. Pickering.

"Many of President Bush's nominees to the appellate courts, recommended by the Federalist Society and other right-wing advocates, have troubling records and could cause serious damage to our rights and liberties," the groups said in press statement.

The report is expected to include criticism of the pro-life stance of Judge Pickering, who has been nominated to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Judge Pickering was chairman of the first national Republican platform committee that called for a constitutional amendment to ban abortion. "The Senate should reject far-right court-packing efforts, and should withhold its consent from right-wing nominees who do not demonstrate a commitment to civil rights and liberties," the groups said. "More moderate, mainstream nominees who reflect genuine bipartisan consultation should receive priority in processing."

The criticisms were dismissed by key Senate Republicans who said Judge Pickering had been approved by the American Bar Association.

"He's eminently qualified, supported by a broad group of individuals in our state, including minorities and women and plaintiff's attorneys and defense attorneys, and Republicans and Democrats. He's an outstanding individual," said Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican.

Judge Pickering was nominated in June, and one hearing was held late last year. Another hearing is expected in the coming weeks, and Republicans are pushing for a vote before the Presidents Day recess next month.

Democrats have stalled the vote by asking for additional information and notes, a tactic Mr. Lott describes as "a classic case of how the committee has kicked the can down the road."

"This is unnecessary and ridiculous harassment, and I believe that he will get a hearing and he will be confirmed," Mr. Lott said.

Mr. Bush nominated 64 judges last year, and 28 were confirmed. Yesterday, Mr. Bush nominated an additional 24 judges, bringing the total number now before the Senate to 60.

The groups also are opposing the nominations of Carolyn Kuhl, a California state trial court judge, to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals; Jeffrey Sutton to the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals; and Priscilla Owen, a justice on the Texas Supreme Court, to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The chief criticism of these nominees is that all are members of the Federalist Society for Law and Public Policy, a group of conservatives and libertarians.

According to the Federalist Web site (www.fed-soc.org), the group's mission "is founded on the principles that the state exists to preserve freedom, that the separation of governmental powers is central to our Constitution, and that it is emphatically the province and duty of the judiciary to say what the law is, not what it should be."

Sen. Larry E. Craig, Idaho Republican and chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, said Mr. Bush "will appoint exactly who he wants to appoint."

"That is the responsibility of the president; that is what happens when you win the presidency," Mr. Craig said.

Mr. Craig said the organizations had the right to speak out but cautioned them to stick to the facts.

"It's a tragic day in America when you can make political hay by failing to tell the truth," Mr. Craig said.

Since December, the liberal groups and other feminist organizations have been plotting a "nasty and contentious fight" against Mr. Bush's judicial nominees who do not support abortion, according to a memo of the groups' meeting obtained by The Washington Times.

The other organizations include the Ms. Foundation and the National Organization for Women.

Senators Protest Bush Judicial Pick; Murray, Cantwell Miffed at Selection Process, Say They Won't Back Leighton

By Charles Pope
The Seattle Post-Intelligencer
Thursday, January 24, 2002

President Bush yesterday nominated Tacoma attorney Ronald Leighton to be a federal district judge for Western Washington, ignoring strenuous objections by the state's two senators who complained they weren't adequately consulted.

Leighton was selected by an all-Republican selection committee formed with the White House's support by Rep. Jennifer Dunn, R-Wash. That angered Democratic Sens. Patty Murray and Maria Cantwell who said the nominee should be the product of a bipartisan panel. In a letter last month to White House counsel Alberto Gonzales, Murray and Cantwell said "we will not support any nominee for a Washington state federal bench vacancy who has not come through a bipartisan commission process."

That threat could stop Leighton in his tracks in the Senate, where a single objection is all that's required to derail a nomination. "I'm confident the Senate will not confirm a judicial nominee that does not have the support of the state's senators," Murray said.

"This is not about Mr. Leighton. He may well be a good, qualified candidate for judge. I'm sorry he got caught up in the White House's inability to understand that the Senate has a role in confirming judges," Murray said.

Murray added that the bipartisan system she used when Republican Slade Gorton served in the Senate would be a good model. That effort produced nominees that were supported by both parties and who enjoyed quick confirmation.

That is not likely to happen this time.

The nomination intensified a war of wills pitting Murray and Cantwell against Dunn and the White House. Murray insisted that the all-Republican committee broke a well-established practice of using a bipartisan panel to solicit potential nominees.

But Dunn said Cantwell and Murray weren't excluded and were given an opportunity to be "equal partners" in the process. Leighton was one of four candidates selected by Dunn's committee. Aides to Dunn said that a complete resume of each candidate was provided to Murray and Cantwell along with an offer to comment. Dunn said neither senator offered any comment.

Dunn praised the 50-year-old Leighton as a strong nominee whose ability and accomplishments shouldn't be overshadowed by a dispute over the process used to select him. "Sometimes senators make it sound like there is one system that has to be used," she said. "For the senators to use process as an excuse not to give the president his nominee is unfortunate."

If confirmed, Leighton would replace Judge Robert Bryan at the federal court in Tacoma. Bryan announced last year he would take "senior status," meaning he no longer would hear a full docket of cases.

A senior White House official, who spoke only on the condition he not be named, said the administration rejected a bipartisan commission because it would take too long. "There is a judicial vacancy crisis and the president wants to move rapidly," the official said. "This one has been vacant too long."

Murray disputed that claim, saying she, Cantwell and Dunn have been in discussions for a year in an effort to reach agreement on a method for picking judicial nominees.

The White House official added that Leighton is "superbly qualified" and urged that the Senate consider his qualifications rather than how he was selected. "We're confident he is of such high quality that no matter what the process, Ron Leighton would have been at the top of the list."

Bush Nominates Tacoma Lawyer to Federal Bench

By Katherine Pfleger
The Associated Press
Thursday, January 24, 2002

President Bush has nominated Tacoma, Wash., lawyer Ronald Leighton to be a federal district judge in Western Washington, over the protests of the state's U.S. senators who say they were excluded from the selection process.

Democratic Sens. Patty Murray and Maria Cantwell have promised to block the nomination with procedural moves unless the White House uses a bipartisan commission to find a replacement for Judge Robert J. Bryan at the U.S. District Court in Tacoma. For instance, Murray has said she will put a "hold" on Leighton's nomination - a maneuver that would prevent the Senate from voting on a judge.

Her spokesman Todd Webster said Murray has been "crystal clear" that any nominee must come from a commission made up of Republicans and Democrats.

"This is a tradition that has served the people of Washington state in getting even-tempered, qualified, balanced judges for lifetime appointments," Webster said Wednesday.

Though the nomination appeared headed for a deadlock, a senior White House official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the administration is hopeful Leighton will be approved.

"We think, in the end, the Senate's job ... is to focus on the qualifications," the official said. "Mr. Leighton is just an absolute A-plus nominee."

Murray and Cantwell have been sparring with the White House for nearly a year about how the opening would be filled. At the White House's direction, Rep. Jennifer Dunn, R-Wash., formed a Republican selection committee, even though the senators considered the negotiations ongoing.

Dunn said Leighton is a strong candidate who has been vetted twice for federal judicial openings but never approved. She said the senators were invited to appoint people to an evenly divided bipartisan selection commission but the senators didn't want to be bound by the commission's final four candidates.

Murray and Cantwell "have chosen to use a process excuse," Dunn said. "Going backward (with a new commission) would not solve the problem."

Cantwell is a member of the Judiciary Committee, responsible for screening federal judicial nominees. Her spokesman Jed Lewison said she is "in sync" with Murray on the need for a bipartisan commission.

Cantwell "will take the necessary actions to make sure that a bipartisan process is the one that is used," Lewison said.

Presidents historically have listened to the wishes of home-state senators when filling judicial vacancies. However, three states - Washington, California and Wisconsin - have instead used commissions made up of Republicans and Democrats to fill openings.

White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales has called the states "isolated exceptions." He has said Bush is not generally supportive of the commissions, though he would be willing to use them - under conditions that Murray and Cantwell found objectionable.

Leighton's nomination comes as Bush is working to fill 101 federal judicial openings, including 70 in U.S. district courts.

The opening in Tacoma was created a year ago when Bryan took "senior status," a type of semiretirement that allowed him to significantly limit his cases, though he is carrying a full load until a successor is named.

In a phone interview, Leighton said he asked to be considered because he would love the job, but was cautious about how his nomination would work out.

"The process is a difficult one and fraught with issues that don't involve me," he said.

Leighton is a partner with the Seattle-area law firm of Gordon Thomas Honeywell Malanca Peterson & Danheim.

Bush Names 3 to U.S. District Court

By Torsten Ove
The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Thursday, January 24, 2002

President Bush yesterday nominated three local lawyers to judgeships in U.S. District Court.

Bush named Joy Flowers Conti and Art Schwab, both lawyers at the Downtown firm of Buchanan Ingersoll, and Allegheny County Solicitor Terry McVerry to fill long-standing vacancies on the federal bench.

The three must be confirmed by the U.S. Senate, a lengthy process that could be dragged out because of a backlog of nearly 70 other nominees for federal judgeships.

"I'm expecting it could be months," said Conti, who said she was honored to have been chosen and promised to do her best as a federal judge.

Schwab said he is eager to serve, too.

"My family and I are very joyful," he said. "I'm looking forward to being of service in Western Pennsylvania."

McVerry couldn't be reached yesterday.

The Western District of Pennsylvania has been short of its full complement of 10 judges for years.

Currently there are four vacancies. When U.S. District Judge William Standish takes senior status in March, it will be five. And when U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith is confirmed by the Senate for a position on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, it will be six.

The filling of judicial vacancies nationwide has been hindered repeatedly by partisan bickering. The delay in getting local judgeships filled was rooted in a political dispute between former President Clinton and Pennsylvania's Republican senators, Rick Santorum and Arlen Specter. But now the process seems to be moving forward.

"It's a real breakthrough," said Schwab.

Schwab is chief counsel for complex litigation at Buchanan Ingersoll. A 1968 graduate of Grove City College, he received his law degree from the University of Virginia in 1972.

Conti, a 1973 graduate of Duquesne University law school, is a former tenured professor of law at Duquesne and taught courses on corporations, corporate finance, corporate reorganizations and bankruptcy.

McVerry, a former state legislator, worked as an assistant district attorney and is a former Allegheny County Common Pleas judge.

Pickering Nomination for Federal Court Under Fire

By Jason Straziuso

The Commercial Appeal

Thursday, January 24, 2002

Some advocacy groups are challenging a Bush nominee for a federal appeals court job, claiming the Mississippi judge gave false testimony when he became a district judge a decade ago.

Charles Pickering, a former state senator and the father of Rep. Chip Pickering (R-Miss.), also has come under fire for some of his rulings and his votes in the Legislature during the 1970s.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott says Pickering has the support of key Senate Democrats and will have a second hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee in the next two weeks, following an initial hearing in October. Pickering has been nominated for a seat on the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

L. A. Warren of the Mississippi NAACP legal division said his group believes Pickering gave false testimony to the Senate during his 1990 confirmation hearing to become a federal judge.

During that hearing, according to Senate records reviewed by The Associated Press, Pickering testified he "never had any contact with the Sovereignty Commission," Mississippi's now-defunct segregation watchdog agency.

However, a 1972 letter in the Sovereignty Commission files includes a reference to three then-state senators, including Pickering, saying they "requested to be advised" about a group organizing pulpwood workers in the state.

The Sovereignty Commission was established in the 1950s to spy on individuals and groups who might threaten the state's official policy of segregation. Its agents also kept tabs on organizations it felt had Communist leanings.

The 1972 letter was addressed to the commission's director, W. Webb Burke, from Edgar C. Fortenberry, one of its investigators assigned to southern Mississippi. Fortenberry's letter did not identify to whom Pickering's request was made.

There was no other documentation in the files to indicate Pickering had direct contact with the commission, which ceased functioning in 1973. Pickering served in the Mississippi Senate from 1972 to 1980.

Pickering, who was given a "well qualified" rating by the American Bar Association, told AP in a telephone interview he was aware of the issues likely to be brought up at his next hearing.

"It is not appropriate for me to comment on the Sovereignty Commission issue or any other issue until I appear before the Judiciary Committee," he said.

Lott (R-Miss.) said he has received "commitments of support" for Pickering from Sens. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) the Judiciary Committee Chairman, and Sen. Tom Daschle, the Senate Majority Leader.

"I've been assured they're going to vote on him in early February and he'll be confirmed overwhelmingly," he said.

Lott also said Pickering had "broad support" politically.

Mimi Devlin, a spokesman for the Senate Judiciary Committee, said "no such promises or confirmations from Senator Leahy" were given to Lott. No date has been set for a second hearing, she said.

The Alliance for Justice, a Washington-based association of advocacy organizations, has monitored judicial nominees since 1984. The self-described "progressive" group on Thursday plans to highlight Pickering's record, which it calls anti-women and anti-minority.

The alliance points to Pickering's political record from the 1970s, including his votes for a Republican Party platform against abortion rights, and his votes as a state senator in the voting rights arena.

Judicial Nominee to Face Questions About Enron Contributions

The Associated Press

Wednesday, January 23, 2002

A federal judicial nominee who wrote a ruling favorable to Enron Corp. after taking campaign money from the now-bankrupt energy trader will get close scrutiny, Vermont Sen. Patrick Leahy said.

Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen wrote a unanimous ruling that saved Enron $225,000 in taxes, two years after taking $8,600 in campaign contributions from the company, according to the watchdog group Texans for Public Justice. President Bush has tapped Owen to become a member of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. She has been awaiting Senate confirmation.

"The Senate will look at Justice Owen's Enron rulings as part of her overall record," Leahy told The Dallas Morning News in Wednesday's editions.

"She has a right to take contributions, but any judge - liberal or conservative - faces the legitimate question about whether a contribution influenced their thinking," said Leahy, a Democrat.

Owen, a Republican, was the author of a unanimous Texas Supreme Court opinion in 1996 that settled a tax issue in Enron's favor. The opinion rejected the Spring Independent School District's argument that the Enron natural gas inventory should be assessed at a value $15 million higher than stated by the company.

That decision spared Enron $225,000 in taxes. It came two years after Owen accepted $8,600 in Enron contributions, according to Texans for Public Justice. The nonprofit group tracks campaign spending.

Owen has not fielded questions regarding the Enron contribution or her judicial decisions.

Texas Justice's Enron Money Draws Criticism

By Michelle Mittelstadt
The Dallas Morning News
Wednesday, January 23, 2002

An Enron scandal that has proved nettlesome to the executive and legislative branches now is spilling over to the judiciary, with word that a prospect for a prestigious federal appellate court seat received Enron campaign contributions and later authored a Texas Supreme Court opinion favorable to the bankrupt energy trader.

Senators "undoubtedly" will examine Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen's dealings with Enron when her nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is considered, the Senate Judiciary Committee chairman said Tuesday.

"The Senate will look at Justice Owen's Enron rulings as part of her overall record," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. "She has a right to take contributions, but any judge _ liberal or conservative _ faces the legitimate question about whether a contribution influenced their thinking." The Republican justice was the author of a unanimous Texas Supreme Court opinion in 1996 that settled an arcane tax issue in Enron's favor, rejecting the Spring Independent School District's argument that the Enron natural gas inventory should be assessed at a value $15 million higher than stated by the company.

That ruling, which spared Enron $225,000 in taxes, came two years after she accepted $8,600 in Enron contributions, said Texans for Public Justice, a nonprofit group that tracks campaign spending.

Liberal advocacy organizations, which already have been geared up for a fight over the Owen nomination, said her Enron ties raise questions about the conservative jurist's candidacy.

"We're talking about a candidate to the second-highest court in the land and for a lifetime appointment," said Nan Aron, president of the Alliance for Justice, which calls Justice Owen and other Bush judicial nominees too extreme. "Already there are several major questions that have been raised concerning her overall bias, as revealed in her opinions in favor of wealthy and powerful interests.

"She will have a very, very tough road ahead."

The judiciary committee has yet to schedule hearings on Justice Owen's nomination.

"I'm not at all saying this is a total disqualification . . . but it is an additional factor that makes her all the more controversial," said Elliot Minberg, legal director of People for the American Way.

Justice Owen was not fielding questions, but her defenders rejected the notion that the donations should disqualify her.

"Absolutely not," said Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

At the White House, the Owen criticism was dismissed as partisan posturing.

"Judge Owen is a person of the highest integrity, who is extremely well qualified," said White House spokesman Scott McClellan.

Mr. Gramm noted that Enron, once one of Texas' largest companies, gave to many candidates.

That's the problem, said Craig McDonald, noting that Texas, unlike most states, elects judges and allows them to take contributions from law firms and other interested parties. A Texans for Public Justice study estimates that 43 percent of Justice Owen's campaign contributions have come from interests that have done business before the state's highest court.

Since 1993, Enron has contributed $134,000 to Texas Supreme Court members, the group says.

"We're all victims of our times, and the Enron scandal has probably just increased the scrutiny over this practice," McDonald said.

While Justice Owen is precluded by judicial ethics from discussing her 1996 opinion, Supreme Court spokesman Osler McCarthy, who spoke for her, said the criticism directed at her was partisan gamemanship.

Her ruling, in a 9-0 decision, affirmed the constitutionality of a law passed 171-1 in the Texas House and 30-1 in the state Senate, he said.

The Fall of Enron; Contributions at Issue in Judge's Confirmation

By Janet Elliot

The Houston Chronicle

Wednesday, January 2002

Enron's political contributions have become an issue in the confirmation battle involving a Texas Supreme Court justice who has been nominated to a federal appellate bench.

Liberal groups concerned about President Bush's nomination of Justice Priscilla Owen to a vacancy on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals have seized on a 1996 opinion that saved Enron hundreds of thousands of dollars in property taxes.

Owen took $ 8,700 in contributions from Enron's political action committee and executives during her 1994 election campaign.

"Now that the Enron scandal has every politician scrambling to clear their name of Enron contributions, I think that the money absolutely will be a key issue in Owen's confirmation," said Craig McDonald, director of Texans for Public Justice, which monitors campaign contributions.

Owen is one of the most conservative members of the all-Republican Supreme Court.

The tax case involved a dispute with Spring Independent School District over the date on which Enron would inventory natural gas stored in a salt dome facility. The inventory volume differed by $ 15 million worth of gas between Sept. 1, 1989, and Jan. 1, 1990.

Because Enron elected to use the earlier appraisal, the school district claimed it lost $ 225,000 in tax revenue.

Owen wrote the opinion for a unanimous court that reversed a ruling by Houston's 14th Court of Appeals that a law classifying inventory separately from other property was unconstitutional.

"The winter months are typically a period of peak demand for natural gas. It is not arbitrary or capricious for the Legislature to permit the taxable value of natural gas inventories to be determined on a date other than January 1, when inventories may be higher than at other times of the year," wrote Owen.

Owen's opinion stated that the lost tax revenue was $ 15 million, but she apparently confused the tax loss with the difference in valuation, said Osler McCarthy, a spokesman for the Supreme Court. McCarthy said the case was a "pretty routine tax case soundly decided based on U.S. Supreme Court precedent."

The school district and its lawyers declined comment on the case. But a lawyer who represented Enron said he's offended at the suggestion that the court decided the case on anything other than the law.

"We won that thing on the merits. That was a clear case of interpretation of legislative ability to give taxpayers the opportunity to reduce their tax burden," said Berry Bowen, a Houston solo practitioner who worked in Enron's legal department from 1990 to 1995.

Elliot Minberg, legal director of People for the American Way, a group that monitors judicial nominations, said Owen's authoring of an opinion after accepting a political contribution "raises an issue about the appearance of impropriety."

"It would be equally a problem if it wasn't Enron. It's an issue regardless of who the corporate contributor would be," said Minberg, whose group has expressed concern but not opposed Owen.

Last May, Bush nominated Owen to the New Orleans-based court, which hears appeals from Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi. The Senate Judiciary Committee has not yet scheduled a hearing on her nomination.

In another 1996 case involving Enron, Owen recused herself.

McCarthy, the court spokesman, said she apparently recused herself because her former law firm, Andrews & Kurth, was involved in the case.

Justices can legally accept donations from lawyers or parties with cases before the court. Texas has been regularly criticized for its high-dollar Supreme Court races.

"Nobody on this court is going to dispute that the system is broken and needs to be corrected. But it's the system we have until the Texas Legislature gives Texas voters the chance to change it," said McCarthy.

U.S. Bench Nomination Expected for Martinez

By Jay Weaver

The Miami Herald

Wednesday, January 23, 2002

President Bush is expected to nominate Jose "Joe" Martinez as a Miami federal judge as soon as today, capping his career as a legal Naval officer, U.S. prosecutor, drug-enforcement director and top civil lawyer.

The affable Martinez would also bring a sports fanatic's perspective to the bench.

Next to the law, his real passion is his alma mater, the University of Miami. He's crazy about UM baseball, and he calls the Canes football games in Spanish on the Archdiocese of Miami's radio station, WACC. Martinez, born in the Dominican Republic and raised in Miami, was the front-runner over Miami-Dade Circuit Judge Jerald Bagley and Miami federal Magistrate Ted Bandstra, according to sources familiar with the nomination. The lifetime appointment to the Miami federal seat, which pays $150,000 a year and had been occupied by U.S. District Judge Edward Davis for 21 years, must be confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

"His dedication to this country and this community is incredible," said Thomas D. Wood Sr., a UM trustee. He was Martinez's Naval Reserve commander in 1977 when both went to the U.S. base in Guantanamo Bay to provide legal assistance to military personnel.

"I've never heard him say an ugly word about anyone," said Wood. "Liking people is what enables him to help people."

Martinez, 60, declined to comment about his imminent nomination, saying it would be "inappropriate." The White House, which has scheduled a press conference for today on federal judicial nominations, wouldn't comment either.

Martinez, a Republican, was recommended along with Bagley and Bandstra as finalists last summer for Davis' position by the 22-member Federal Judicial Nominating Commission. The Florida panel's chairman, Roberto Martinez, a former U.S. attorney in Miami, said they were interviewed by the state's Democratic U.S. senators, Bill Nelson and Bob Graham, and then the White House.

Joe Martinez came close to being nominated for the federal bench in 1992, when then-Republican Sen. Connie Mack recommended him to President George Bush. But when Bill Clinton won the White House, Martinez's bid for the bench came to a halt.

This time, his appointment seems certain.

Davis, now chairman of Florida litigation for the Miami-based law firm, Akerman Senterfitt, described Martinez as a "real trial lawyer" who would make a popular choice to replace him. "He'll come on well prepared for the federal job," Davis said. "He's well liked by people who do business with him. You can rely on his word."

Said past Florida Bar President Herman Russomanno: "He has the virtues of a federal judge - integrity, honesty, high moral standards and what I refer to as open-mindedness and impartiality."

Martinez's life is an immigrant's success story.

His parents left the Dominican Republic with Martinez, his sister and their grandmother at the end of World War II. They first settled in New York City, but relocated to Miami in 1949.

His father, though a lawyer in the Dominican Republic, launched an import-export business here. Young Martinez worked his way through the University of Miami, studying marketing.

He dreamed of becoming a Naval pilot, but that was dashed. He reset his sights on law school at UM, graduating in 1965, and married his wife, Mary Anne, the following year.

His first job was as a Naval officer in the Judge Advocate General Corps in Key West. After he left active duty in 1968, he joined the Reserves and retired decades later as a captain.

Martinez quickly made his mark as an assistant U.S. prosecutor in the late 1960s - an era when the nation's war on drugs was in its infancy in Miami. He was tapped to become the regional director of the Office for Drug Abuse Law Enforcement in 1972.

"We were looking for an experienced person who was liked by the agents but also one who was tough enough and could not be conned by the agents," said former ODALE Deputy Director John R. Bartels Jr. "Joe was heads and tails above everyone else in Florida. His name kept coming up."

Since the mid-1970s, Martinez has still kept his hand in criminal law, from tax evasion to racketeering cases. But he has been more active as a corporate civil lawyer, including major product-liability trials, such as the Florida class-action lawsuit against Philip Morris.

Martinez, a father of two grown daughters, lives in Coral Gables.

Mays Tapped to Fill Bench; West Tennessee District Court Short-Handed

By James Brosnan

The Commercial Appeal

Thursday, January, 24, 2002

President Bush Thursday nominated Memphis lawyer Hardy Mays to the depleted U.S. District Court for West Tennessee.

Mays, 54, is a partner at Baker Donelson Bearman and Caldwell, and is a former chief of staff to Gov. Don Sundquist.

The Mays nomination came almost two years after the death of Judge Jerome Turner and six months after Mays was recommended for the vacancy by Tennessee's two Republican senators, Fred Thompson and Bill Frist. The district court also has been further short-handed because of the forced six-month leave of absence of Judge Jon McCalla, who last year admitted "improper and intemperate conduct."

His absence has created more work for judges Bernice Donald and Julia Gibbons, who is awaiting Senate action on her nomination to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. The other district judge, James Todd, mostly hears cases in Jackson.

"I'm grateful the President has confidence in me and I hope to justify that," said Mays. "If and when the Senate sees fit to confirm me, I'm ready to go to work."

When the Senate will act is uncertain.

Thompson indicated Thursday he would like to press the Gibbons nomination first.

"We're going to work on it. We've got a big problem with the Sixth Circuit," said Thompson.

The Cincinnati appellate court is down to half its usual complement of 16 judges. None of Bush's nominees has been approved, in part because Michigan's Democratic senators have a "hold" on the Michigan nominees.

Nationwide, only one of Bush's 23 circuit court nominees has gotten a hearing from the Judiciary Committee, Sen. Don Nickles) (R-Okla.) noted Thursday.

Today, four liberal groups are expected to announce opposition to the nomination of U.S. Dist. Judge Charles Pickering of Laurel, Miss., to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Nominations

City News Service

Thursday, November 24, 2002

Two lawyers who are former federal prosecutors were nominated by President Bush for positions as U.S. District Court judges.

Bush yesterday named Percy Anderson, 52, a partner at Sonnenschein, Nath & Rosenthal, and John Walter, 57, senior partner at Walter, Finestone & Richter, a firm that he founded. They are the president's first nominations for the District Court in Los Angeles, which has six vacancies. There are 21 federal trial judges in Los Angeles.

Anderson and Walter were nominated for federal judgeships by Bush's father in 1992, but their nominations died without a hearing as the confirmation process ground to a halt in the closing months of the senior Bush's presidency, the Los Angeles Times reported.

Last year, Anderson and Walter were unanimously recommended for the judgeships by a six-member screening committee of both Democratic and Republican attorneys.

Anderson, born and raised in California, graduated from UCLA and UCLA Law School. He worked for two years at San Fernando Valley Legal Assistance before joining the U.S. attorney's office in 1979. Most recently, Anderson has done civil litigation and white-collar criminal defense work.

Walter, a native of Buffalo, N.Y., graduated from Loyola University and Loyola Law School. He was a federal prosecutor from 1970 to 1972. After his government service, he joined a large national firm before founding his own firm.

Bush Names 2 for Judgeships in L.A. Courts: The President's Picks Were Also Tapped By His Father, but no Hearings were Held

By Henry Weinstein
The Los Angeles Times
Thursday, January 24, 2001

President Bush on Wednesday nominated two Republican attorneys from Los Angeles who are former federal prosecutors for prestigious positions as U.S. District Court judges.

Bush tapped Percy Anderson, 52, a partner at Sonnenschein, Nath & Rosenthal, and John F. Walter, 57, senior partner at Walter, Finestone & Richter, a firm that he founded.

They are the president's first nominations for the District Court in Los Angeles, which has six vacancies and where judges are carrying heavy caseloads. There are 21 federal trial judges in Los Angeles. Anderson and Walter were nominated for federal judgeships by Bush's father in 1992, but their nominations died without a hearing as the confirmation process ground to a halt in the closing months of his presidency.

Last year, Anderson and Walter were unanimously recommended for the judgeships by a six-member screening committee of Democratic and Republican attorneys that was created by representatives of the Bush administration and California's two Democratic senators, Barbara Boxer and Dianne Feinstein.

The nominations were among 24 Bush sent to the Senate on Wednesday for judgeships around the country. In recent weeks, Bush has complained about the pace of the confirmation process. When the Senate adjourned Dec. 20, it had confirmed just 28 federal judges. Before Wednesday's action by Bush, there were 23 nominations to federal appeals courts and 14 nominations to District Courts. Both California senators issued statements praising the nominees, which should enhance their prospects for a swift confirmation, said Gerald Parsky, the West Los Angeles attorney who heads Bush's California judicial screening team.

"Mr. Walter and Mr. Anderson both demonstrated strong skills and qualifications to the advisory committee and this bodes well for the nomination process in the Senate," Feinstein said.

Boxer added: "Both are very well qualified to serve on the federal bench."

Walter, a native of Buffalo, N.Y., graduated from Loyola University and Loyola Law School. He was a federal prosecutor from 1970 to 1972 and obtained a conviction in a well-known case involving a group of sophisticated burglars who broke into a Laguna Niguel bank, rifled every safe deposit box and got away with millions of dollars. After his government service, Walter joined a large national law firm and then founded his firm, specializing in complex civil cases.

Anderson, born and raised in California, graduated from UCLA and UCLA Law School. He worked for two years at San Fernando Valley Neighborhood Legal Assistance before joining the U.S. attorney's office in 1979.

Perhaps his most noteworthy case as a government lawyer was the successful 1985 prosecution of Thomas P. Cavanaugh, an engineer who tried to sell the Soviets information about the U.S. Air Force's stealth technology, which makes airplanes invisible to radar. Cavanaugh received a life sentence.

Anderson recently has done civil litigation and white-collar criminal defense work. In addition, he served on the Christopher Commission, which investigated the Los Angeles Police Department in the aftermath of the 1992 riots.

Los Angeles attorney Jan L. Handzlik, who knows both nominees, said they deserve swift confirmation. "They were bridesmaids before," Handzlik said. "Hopefully, the ceremony will be completed this time."

Confirm Moderate Judges

By Bill Lakin
The Los Angeles Times
Thursday, January 24, 2002

The current impasse in the Senate approval of federal appellate court judges isn't about payback or politics, and it isn't a "game," as suggested in the headline of your Jan. 21 editorial, "Judgeship Game Cycles On." It's about not confirming judges who would set the country's laws back 200 years. The judicial nominees sent down by President Bush were handpicked by the ultra-right-wing Federalist Society, a group of lawyers so extreme they advocate rolling back the law to the 18th century. I don't believe these kinds of people should be part of our judiciary.

The Times recommends bringing all candidates to an immediate Senate confirmation vote. But that's only a short-term solution and won't fix the problem.

Bush should no longer rely on advice from his handlers and should stop being the front man for the Federalist Society. He should withdraw these nominations, go back to using the American Bar Assn.'s recommendations (as our past presidents did) and nominate moderates--Democrat or Republican.

The Leahy Detainees

The Washington Times
Thursday, January 24, 2001

President Bush is planning to place still more human beings into that punishing state of incarceration we've been hearing so much about of late, but Amnesty International won't be staging any protests. Nor will Ramsey Clark be filing suit. The shameful fact is that no human-rights group cares enough to speak out on behalf of this newest lot of detainees - judicial detainees, that is - and the Leahy limbo of neglect and stagnation they now prepare to enter. We used to call such people judicial nominees, but that was back when the federal judicial confirmation process had a beginning, a middle and an end. Since Sen. Patrick Leahy, Vermont Democrat, assumed control of the Judiciary Committee gavel, however, the process has undergone a few fundamental changes. The beginning remains reassuringly the same: Mr. Leahy still allows the president to appoint judges to the federal bench, which is really quite accommodating of him when you think about it. But the middle (the committee hearing) is a dicey thing, and the end (the floor vote) is nowhere in sight. Hence the change in terminology from judicial nominee to Leahy detainee.

It could be that one day we look back upon the Democratic delaying tactics of the last session and see a game of "Mother, May I" next to the mass obstructionism Senate Democrats seem to have in store for the new Congress. Since the president appointed Otto Reich assistant secretary of state for Western Hemisphere affairs and Eugene Scalia solicitor of the Labor Department earlier this month - after Mr. Reich was "detained" for some nine months by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee without a hearing, and Mr. Scalia was denied a floor vote by Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle - the rhetoric among Senate Democrats regarding all White House appointees, from ambassadors to humanitarian aid workers to judges, has become downright alarming. As Sen. Joseph Biden put it on NBC's "Meet the Press," even before Mr. Bush made the two recess appointments, several Democratic senators came to him and said, "Communicate to the president that if he does this, we will retaliate with regard to the rest of his nominations."

Sounds like tough-guy, take-no-prisoners talk. But whose side are the Democrats on? By refusing to confirm assorted key players on Mr. Bush's foreign policy team, and by refusing to move forward on dozens of federal judicial nominees urgently needed to fill a precarious 11 percent (and growing) vacancy rate in the federal judiciary, Senate Democrats cannot be said to be fighting for the American people. They are fighting for themselves and their prerogatives - not exactly the noblest causes up for grabs at the moment - and if they win, the country loses. Meanwhile, scores of Americans, willing and able to serve their country, will only be able to serve time.

Bench Politics: Senate Stalls on Judges Who Would Uphold the Constitution

By Roger Pilon

The CATO Institute

Monday, January 21, 2002

Should the Senate Judiciary Committee grill nominees for the federal courts about their ideology and then reject those who fail an ideological litmus test? The implications are breathtaking. Yet Senate Democrats appear prepared to do that-or to reject nominees outright, without a hearing, based simply on their perceived "ideology."

The roots of this effort are deep, going back a century, but the proximate cause is Bush v. Gore. Just after the decision came down, the legal academy, overwhelmingly Democratic if not leftist, exploded in a torrent of anger. Some 550 professors from 120 law schools ran a full-page ad in The New York Times a year ago claiming that the Court's majority had acted as "political proponents for candidate Bush, not as judges." In op-eds, articles, books, and TV appearances, the venom poured forth. Yale Law School's Bruce Ackerman went so far as to urge Senate Democrats to reject every judicial nominee that the illegitimate President George W. Bush offered up.

They haven't done that, but they're certainly in a confirmation stall. Since Bush took office, there have been 128 vacancies on the 862-member Article III courts. To date, Bush has nominated 65 candidates to fill those vacancies. Only 28 have been confirmed, leaving 100 empty seats, 39 of which are judicial emergency vacancies according to the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. On the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit, half the seats today are empty.

In fact, the stall is most evident at the circuit level. Only six of Bush's 29 circuit court nominees have been confirmed, and two of those were Clinton holdovers, re-nominated as a gesture to the Democrats. More telling still, 11 of those nominees have been hanging since May, never having had a hearing, much less a vote.

And we're not talking here about political hacks. Miguel Estrada, Michael McConnell, John Roberts Jr., Jeffrey Sutton-those are just some of the stellar appellate nominees whose names have been before the Senate since May. Their problem, it seems, is that they cannot get through the Democrats ideological filter. Those are some of the same Democrats, recall, who condemned Reagan Republicans for their alleged use of a pro-life litmus test, despite having no evidence of the practice.

What is plain now is that it's not the use of a litmus test that troubles Democrats, but the content of such a test. And they're not at all reluctant to give evidence of their own test.

‘CORE VALUES’ REVEALED

Last June, Sen. Charles Schumer, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight and the Courts, wrote an op-ed for The New York Times, "Judging by Ideology," which appeared on the same day he held hearings on whether ideology should play a role in the selection and confirmation of judges. He concluded it should, to no one's surprise. In fact, Schumer gave us a three-part test for determining when to invoke ideology: "the extent to which the president himself makes his initial selections on the basis of a particular ideology, the composition of the courts at the time of the nomination and the political climate of the day." One looks in vain for bright lines in that test.

Schumer's aim, however, is clear. It is, expressly, to keep conservatives like Justices Antonio Scalia and Clarence Thomas off our courts. "The Supreme Court's recent 5-4 decisions that constrain Congressional power," Schumer wrote, "are probably the best evidence that the court is dominated by conservatives." Thus, "tilting the court further to the right would push our court sharply away from the core values held by most of our country's citizens."

Never mind, apparently, what the law might say about the scope of congressional power-or anything else, for that matter. What counts, rather, is our citizens' "core values."

That glimpse of the Democratic agenda was embellished two months later, again just prior to another Schumer hearing on ideology, when party elder Joseph Califano Jr. wrote an op-ed for The Washington Post, "Yes, Litmus-Test Judges." Complaining that gridlock and big money have long kept Congress from legislating on a wide range of urgent matters, Califano noted that concerned citizens have been petitioning the courts with matters they once took to the political branches, making the courts "increasingly powerful architects of public policy."

Indeed, "who sits in federal district and appellate courts is more important than the struggle over the budget" or virtually anything else today in Washington. For we've all learned, Califano continued, "that what can't be won in the legislative or executive may be achievable in a federal district court where a sympathetic judge sits." "The Senate, therefore, needs to decide, on explicitly ideological grounds, who will be "setting national policy" from the bench.

There you have it. Everything is politics. Nothing is principle. Judges don't simply apply law. Sympathetic judges make law, like so many legislators, setting national policy in the process.

Meanwhile, our nominal legislators in the Senate are reduced to vetting our true rulers.

Interestingly, the Constitution, which spells out the actual separation of powers, is mentioned not once in Califano's piece. Doubtless, it is an embarrassment, utterly inconsistent with his picture of a thoroughly politicized judiciary.

LOSING SIGHT OF LIMITS

Yet for all that, Califano's picture is too close to the truth to be ignored. He's put his finger on just why the confirmation battles today loom so large. What he and his Democratic colleagues have failed to do, however, is explain, much less justify, this flight from constitutional principle. To get at that, we have to go further back.

The main origins of the problem lie in the Progressive Era, when the social engineers of the time often sought to do through government what the Constitution plainly left to the private sector. Things came to a head during the New Deal when a frustrated Franklin Roosevelt attempted to pack the Supreme Court. The scheme failed, but FDR won the day when a cowed Court began rethinking the Constitution, effectively eviscerating constitutional limits on federal power.

Although the Court that emerged was called "restrained"-by virtue of its deference to the political branches-it was in truth, activist-finding congressional and executive powers nowhere granted, ignoring rights plainly in the Constitution. And the Court's rethinking led ineluctably to a general shift of power to the judicial branch. The shift had two aspects. First, with the political branches now free to rule almost every aspect of our lives, it was only a matter of time before their ever-expanding product ended up in the courts, with the courts asked to sort out the mess that Congress was making. But those who promoted such schemes didn't always win in the political branches. Thus, second, when they lost, they turned increasingly to the courts, trying to win from sympathetic judges what they had failed to win politically. And the Earl Warren and Warren Burger Courts, already deferring to the political pursuit of "social justice," were only too willing to step into the fray, thinking themselves a legislature of nine.

The Rehnquist Court, by contrast, has taken modest steps over the past decade toward resurrecting constitutional principles of limited government. However modest, those steps have alarmed liberal Democrats. They can't imagine anyone thinking that Congress' powers are limited; that if an end is worthy, Congress still might not have the power to pursue it; that James Madison might have meant it when he said that the powers of the new government would be "few and defined."

Thus, when Democrats seek today to subject judicial nominees to an ideological litmus test, they're continuing the work of an earlier generation of their party. The test they would impose has little to do with law or with the ideology of the Constitution-a document understood for 150 years as having instituted limited government. Rather, it has to do with whether the nominee subscribes to the version of the Constitution that the 1937-38 Court invented to allow the modern welfare state to bloom. That version, which encourages judges both to ignore limits on power and to find rights nowhere to be found, requires a judge to be sensitive to "evolving social values"- sometimes even before they've evolved.

Having earlier Politicized the Constitution, Democrats are now bent on politicizing the judiciary. If they succeed, it will mark the triumph of ideology and the death of law.

There is a Purpose to Compromise in Judicial Nominations

By Evan Schultz
The Fulton County Daily Report

Michael McConnell, meet Judith McConnell. Or, as their most venomous critics might say, will the highfalutin homophobe please come on over and give a big "howdy-do" to the pervert-loving home-wrecker?

These two lawyers (no relationship, according to Judith) have something in common besides their last names: Both have been put through the wringer after being tapped for federal judgeships. No doubt, it's sad to see distinguished jurists smeared in the name of upholding the Constitution. But maybe there's also something reassuring about it (really).

First, a bit more about the unhappy couple. Judith was nominated in 1994 by President Bill Clinton to be a federal district judge in California. Michael was nominated by President George W. Bush last May for a seat on the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Michael is one of the country's pre-eminent constitutional scholars. Now a professor at the University of Utah College of Law, he previously taught law at the University of Chicago, clerked for Justice William Brennan Jr., and has received endorsements from across the ideological spectrum.

Judith is a widely respected judge who, at the time of her nomination in 1994, had served on the bench of the state superior court in San Diego for 15 years. She had support from the state's conservative chief justice and was named San Diego's judge of the year by one group of lawyers in 1991.

Michael McConnell has drawn fire for advocating a vigorous role for religion in American public life, and for helping the Boy Scouts of America successfully argue in the Supreme Court that they should be allowed to exclude homosexuals.

Judith McConnell was savaged for a 1987 opinion in which she agreed with a 16-year-old boy's wish to live with his dead father's gay partner rather than with his mother. Clinton withdrew support for Judith when Senate Republicans opposed her. Bush is still backing Michael, but the Democratic-controlled Senate has not scheduled a hearing for him.

These situations should make all thinking people shiver. We've perfected the politics of destruction to the point where we slander the sterling records and distort the complex thinking of those who strive to serve the common good. Shame on us. Right?

Not necessarily. The nomination process isn't pretty. But it still serves a crucial purpose:

ensuring that no one branch of government, political party or ideology dominates the judiciary.

Yes, No, No, Yes

Since New Year's, the news here in Washington has been drawn back to the fight over judicial nominations between the Senate and the president. Republican senators (Orrin Hatch of Utah leading the charge) have been beating up on the Democrats for stalling by pointing to what Republicans claim is the small percentage of Bush's judicial nominees on whom the Senate has voted and the large number of vacancies on the federal bench.

At the same time, Democrats (led by Patrick Leahy of Vermont) have insisted that they confirmed a record number of judges in 2001. All this, of course, follows six years of the reverse-the Senate Republicans obstructing while the Democratic president complained.

The statistics, though, cloud the real issue. And that, simply put, is whether the administration backs nominees whom the Senate will approve.

The Constitution gives the president the role of playing offense ("he shall nominate ... Judges of the supreme court, and ... all other Officers of the United States"). And it gives the Senate the job of defense (giving "Advice and Consent"). The historical argument rages over how much power each side should have.

On the one hand, Alexander Hamilton stated in The Federalist No. 66 that "There will, of course, be no exertion of CHOICE on the part of the Senate." On the other hand, the Senate rejected one quarter of presidents' choices for the Supreme Court during the nation's first 100 years, including one of George Washington's nominees for chief justice.

At this point, the situation can be summarized pretty simply. The president can nominate whatever geniuses or morons he wants. And the Senate (or at least the party in charge of the Senate) can let them rot. It's a system that demands negotiating-even more so when the two branches are controlled by different parties. That's especially true for this Senate, with its precarious majority, and this president, with his controversial election.

Unfortunately for the McConnells, that's where the mudslinging comes in. All senators say they want moderate nominees. Whenever they obstruct, they claim that it's only because the president has sent rabid extremists-or, more often, they simply refuse to move the nominees as others fling the accusations.

Listen Up, Mr. President

Harsh as it may be, the rhetoric serves an important role-it signals to the president exactly how much leeway he has. It also tells the president when he needs to sit down and talk to the Senate before going forward.

As former Clinton Justice Department official Eleanor Acheson says, some presidents can be very insistent "that this is the choice of the president, that 'I will reserve to myself the final choice.' "

Some presidents have a more soft view of that, namely, they can be pretty easily swayed by a strong pitch made by a senator. And some presidents can do both, depending on who they need to be doing business with when the vacancy arises, and depending on the merits of the candidate. So things can be very varied."

Clinton apparently didn't have a tin ear-he withdrew nine nominees in the face of opposition. The result? Despite Bob Dole's claims during the 1996 presidential campaign that Clinton had established a "judicial hall of shame," an academic study of Clinton's judges pegged their rulings from the bench as just a bit more liberal than those of Gerald Ford's judges.

And, so far at least, Bush seems to be following suit. Despite the roar of protest that greeted Michael McConnell and a few other Bush nominees (Miguel Estrada and Jeffrey Sutton, in particular), the first batch, at least, of Bush's nominees was called "more eclectic and conciliatory than most people expected" by The New York Times.

And, as Leahy likes to point out, the Senate has responded by confirming 28 judges, more than it approved in the first year of either the Clinton or the first Bush administration.

So the more the Senate signals the president by accusing a select few nominees of witchcraft, the more the president gets the message that he needs to consult and compromise with the Senate. The upside is that everyone can take credit for appointing "moderate" judges.

As Abner Mikva, former chief judge of the D.C. Circuit, said while serving as Clinton's White House counsel, "Get a good judge, and he'll be good for all seasons."

The downside, though, is the risk of creating a judiciary that, though competent, doesn't shine. As legal commentator Jeffrey Rosen lamented about Clinton's nominees, "there are few standouts. They are largely a group of soldierly and obscure judges and prosecutors."

And the temptation to nominate such people is strong no matter who's in the White House. For instance, look at the 11th Circuit. Clinton's last appointment to that court was Charles Wilson, a former state judge, federal magistrate and U.S. attorney. Bush's first nominee to the same circuit? William Steele, now a federal magistrate in Alabama.

There are two ways around this. One is to nominate as many creative, original thinkers as possible who, by consensus, still count as moderates. Clinton's successful choice of former Yale Law School Dean Guido Calabresi for the 2nd Circuit was along these lines. (Calabresi was confirmed by unanimous consent.)

The other solution lies in the sort of quiet confirmation vote that took place last November for another controversial Bush nominee-Edith Brown Clement. Clement is a member of the Federalist Society whom the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League has

By Jesse Holland
Associated Press
Thursday, January 24, 2002

Judicial nomination politics are back in full swing just two days into a new congressional year.

Liberal groups are preparing attacks on one of President Bush's appellate court nominees, U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, just as Republicans renew pressure on Democratic senators to move the president's nominees into the 101 vacancies in the federal judiciary system.

Bush on Wednesday added 24 more U.S. District Court nominees to the 66 U.S. Appeals and District Court nominations that the Senate has not yet decided on. Republicans have complained that Democrats stalled Bush's judicial nominees after taking over the Senate in June, confirming just 28 of the president's first 94 nominations. Democrats say they moved as fast as they could, and that Republicans delayed former President Clinton's judicial nominees during his two terms in office.

Republicans say Pickering is a prime example of how Democrats have treated Bush's nominees.

"He's a classic case of how the committee has kicked the can down the road: 'Oh well, yes, we've had one hearing; we may need another one. Oh well, he got all his opinions; how about his unpublished opinions? Oh, by the way, how about his secretaries' notes?'" said Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss. "This is unnecessary and ridiculous harassment."

Bush nominated Pickering to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans in May. But Democratic senators have been lobbied for months to block or stop the nomination.

The nominee, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering, R-Miss., already had one nomination hearing in October, but Democrats have insisted on a second hearing to study his unpublished opinions on civil, reproductive and prisoner rights.

L.A. Warren of the Mississippi branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said his group believes Pickering gave false testimony during his 1990 confirmation hearing to become a U.S. district judge.

criticized. Yet the Senate approved her by a vote of 99-0.

And for certain confirmable but controversial nominees, Senate opponents still could make their point by letting the fight spill to the floor. The nominee wins-with bruises. This might happen to Michael McConnell.

Moderation in Moderation

Which is to say, getting a moderate judiciary does not mean getting a judiciary composed only of moderates. The vote on Clement shows that the Senate knows this. So does a comment by Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., in hearings he called last year on the role of ideology in judicial selections. He said, "Having one or even two justices like (Antonin) Scalia and (Clarence) Thomas might be legitimate because it provides the (Supreme) Court with a particular view of constitutional jurisprudence. But having four or five or nine justices like them would skew the court."

This approach-of approving some novel thinkers mixed in with many more middle-of-the-road judges-has the advantage of keeping the bench stable. At least as important, it respects both the ideological characteristics of judging and the constitutional power of the president.

And it opens the way for horse trading: The Senate will approve some Clements if Bush nominates some Clinton choices (as he did with Roger Gregory, whom Clinton had put on the 4th Circuit though a recess appointment) and/or lots of Steeles.

Even better, the approach probably makes for good government-at least the best hope for good government we have in this world. As a recent New Yorker profile summarized the views of 7th Circuit Judge Richard Posner on judicial selections, "One individual judge, Posner reasons, will never be able to put aside his personal disgusts and instincts, so the trick is to have lots of different judges whose instincts clash, and hope that, in the end, their views will cancel out in such a way as to approximate fairness."

The result, the New Yorker article conceded, may not be fair to any particular litigant. It also might have noted that the result is not fair to any particular judicial nominee. But that's the price of living in a diverse society with a government of checks and balances. And it's the pain of being a McConnell.

Senator Feinstein Statement on Nominations

Senator Feinstein Press Release

Wednesday, January 23, 2002

The nomination by President Bush of Percy Anderson and John Walter to the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California marks the first two nominations to emerge from a bipartisan screening process to fill open judicial positions in California. These nominees both received 6-0 votes from the Judicial Advisory Committee that was established through an agreement Senator Barbara Boxer and I reached with the White House. In achieving these unanimous votes, Mr. Walter and Mr. Anderson both demonstrated strong skills and qualifications to the Advisory Committee and this bodes well for the nomination process in the Senate. I am hopeful that a hearing will be held by the Judiciary Committee at an early date. I also look forward to early White House action to fill the remaining open seats in California: four more in the Central District and one each in the Eastern and Northern Districts.

Percy Anderson is a partner at the national law firm of Sonnenshine, Nath & Rosenthal, in its Los Angeles office. He received his BA and JD degrees from UCLA, graduating from the law school in 1975. He worked as a Staff Attorney and then Directing Attorney for San Fernando Legal Services from 1975 - 1979. He then became an Assistant U.S. Attorney, specializing in criminal litigation. Within that office, he also acted as First Assistant Division Chief and Chief of the Criminal Complaints Unit. In 1985, he left the U.S. Attorney's Office and went into private practice at the Los Angeles office of Bryan, Cave, McPheeters & McRoberts, then at the Sonnenshine firm.

John Walter is a name partner at the Los Angeles law firm of Walter, Finestone & Richter. He received his bachelor's and law degrees from Loyola University, graduating from the law school in 1969 and being admitted to the bar in 1970. After graduation, he worked at Kindel & Anderson from 1969-70, then spent two years at an Assistant U.S. Attorney in the criminal division before returning to Kindel & Anderson. He formed his own firm in 1976 and practices civil and criminal litigation.

The Judicial Advisory Committee is comprised of four six-member subcommittees -- one for each judicial district in the state. Each subcommittee has one member selected by Senator Boxer, one selected by me and one jointly by both Senator Boxer and myself along with three members named by Gerald Parsky, President Bush's State Chair for judicial appointments.

People's for Neas, Other Progressive Leaders Urge Senate Judiciary Committee to Reject Appeals Court Nominee Charles Pickering

By Ralph Neas
People for the American Way
January 24, 2002

People For the American Way President Ralph G. Neas called on the Senate Judiciary Committee to reject the nomination of Charles W. Pickering, Sr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit and released a detailed report documenting Pickering's troubling public record on a range of critical issues. At a press conference with other progressive leaders, Neas said PFAW and other groups would launch a grassroots effort against Pickering's nomination, making this the first major judicial confirmation battle of the Bush administration.

"Achieving ideological domination of the federal judiciary is the top goal of right-wing activists inside and outside the Bush administration, and judges like Charles Pickering are the means to that end," said Neas. "Many of our basic rights and freedoms are at risk. The Senate Judiciary Committee should review Judge Pickering's record and reject his elevation to the appeals court."

Neas said Pickering's record makes him an especially problematic choice for the 5th Circuit, which presides over a three-state area with the largest and most diverse minority population in any Circuit in the country, and which has already decided a number of cases restricting civil and reproductive rights.

The PFAW report released today examines Pickering's public record both before and after he became a judge. Among the report's conclusions:

His record demonstrates insensitivity and even hostility toward key principles and remedies that now safeguard civil rights, and indifference toward the problems caused by laws and institutions that have previously created and perpetuated discrimination.

Even conservative appellate court judges have reversed Judge Pickering on a number of occasions for disregarding controlling precedent on constitutional rights and for improperly denying people access to the courts.

He has been a staunch opponent of women's reproductive rights.

He has demonstrated a disregard for the separation of church and state by repeatedly using his position on the bench to promote involvement in religious programs.

"Elevating Pickering to a powerful appellate court position would give him enormous influence on the interpretation of statutory and constitutional provisions that safeguard the rights of all Americans," concludes the report.

Neas noted that the report released today is based on an incomplete record of Judge Pickering's tenure on the District Court, because Pickering has told the Senate Judiciary Committee that approximately 40 percent of his unpublished opinions – as many as 400 – are not available.

"We don't know what's in those missing rulings," said Neas, "but the rulings we do have make it clear that Pickering has opposed basic principles protecting civil rights and has sought to limit their application. He has even denigrated people who have turned to the courts to protect their civil rights."

Pickering has, for example, criticized the fundamental "one-person, one-vote" principle recognized by the Supreme Court under the Fourteenth Amendment. He has also criticized or sought to limit important remedies provided by the Voting Rights Act.

As a state senator, Pickering supported voting-related measures that helped perpetuate discrimination against African Americans, and voted to appropriate money to fund the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, a notorious agency created by the state in 1956 to resist desegregation. At his 1990 confirmation hearing, Pickering testified that he had never had any contact with the Sovereignty Commission. But PFAW's report notes that a 1972 memorandum by a Commission investigator to its Director stated that "Senator Charles Pickering" and two other state legislators were "very interested" in a Commission investigation into union activity that had resulted in a strike against a large employer in Pickering's home town.

The report also notes that Pickering did not take the opportunity at his confirmation hearings to repudiate a 1959 article he wrote as a law student advising the state legislature how to fix the state's law criminalizing interracial marriage in response to a state Supreme Court ruling that had rendered the law unenforceable. The legislature took his advice.

The report also cites specific instances in which Pickering was overturned by the 5th Circuit, to which he has been nominated, for violating "well-settled principles of law" involving constitutional issues, civil rights, criminal procedure or labor issues. For example, the conservative 5th Circuit has reversed Pickering's misuse of "dismissal with prejudice" – a severe sanction – against an inmate alleging civil rights violations and against a group of plaintiffs in a toxic torts case against a chemical company.

The report documents Pickering's use of his judicial position to promote religion and religious ministries to those coming before his court. It also documents a decades-long hostility to reproductive choice, including his advocacy of a constitutional amendment to ban abortion.

Neas said the grassroots effort to defeat Pickering's nomination would be the first of many unless

President Bush engages in genuine bipartisan dialogue with members of the Senate. Neas urged senators, especially members of the Judiciary Committee, to fulfill their constitutional responsibilities to carefully scrutinize judicial nominees and reject those who have not demonstrated a commitment to upholding civil rights.

"Right-wing senators perpetuated dozens of appeals court vacancies by carrying out an unprecedented ideological blockade against judges nominated by President Clinton," said Neas. "Now they hope President Bush will take advantage of those vacancies to fill the appeals courts with right-wing nominees like Charles Pickering."

Neas noted that 35 percent of President Clinton's appellate court nominees were blocked from 1995-2000; 45 percent failed to receive a vote in the congressional session during which they were nominated. Republican-nominated judges currently hold a majority on seven of the 13 circuit courts of appeal. If all President Bush's current nominees are approved, such judges will make up a majority on 11 circuit courts. And by the end of 2004, Republican-appointed judges could make up a majority on every one of the 13 circuit courts of appeals.

"A federal judiciary completely dominated by right-wing judges would be a disaster for Americans' rights and freedoms," said Neas. "Senators must be willing to say no to Judge Pickering and they must be willing to say no to right-wing efforts to pack the federal judiciary."

Statement of Kate Michelman Announcing Opposition to Judicial Nominee Charles Pickering.

NARAL

Tuesday, January 22, 2002

Good morning, thank you for coming here today. As you know, this coalition has gathered today to announce our opposition to the nomination by President Bush of Charles Pickering to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Charles Pickering's nomination by President Bush is part of a continuing effort to hasten the reversal of Roe and the end of legal abortion. A lifetime appointment to the Court of Appeals for Charles Pickering may lead to a lifetime of disappointment and hardship for women seeking to exercise their constitutional right to choose.

Pickering's record on choice is crystal clear -- during his lifetime as a conservative political activist, Pickering has demonstrated open hostility to a woman's right to choose and has sought to reverse Roe through a constitutional amendment to ban abortion. This fact alone must disqualify him from sitting on the Fifth Circuit - a court that has done more than most courts in recent years to limit that fundamental right.

The Fifth Circuit is one of the most critical courts in the United States to the future of reproductive rights for women. This Circuit - consisting of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas -- reviews legislation from an area of the country that is particularly hostile to a woman's right to choose. It is at the center of attempts by state legislatures to restrict abortion and limit women's ability to exercise their constitutionally protected rights under Roe. Indeed, since 1995, the three states in the Fifth Circuit have introduced nearly 175 measures to restrict abortion rights.

The Fifth Circuit has eroded the exercise of choice in prior decisions, and poses a continued threat to these rights in the future. Confirming Pickering would add fuel to the ultra-conservative fire on this court for decades. It's the wrong court for Charles Pickering. And Charles Pickering is the wrong nominee for this court. Close scrutiny of Charles Pickering's record over the last four decades shows someone who should not be confirmed for a circuit court judgeship.

Pickering's career has been notable, not for his record as a judge or as a legal scholar, but as a partisan political activist. Pickering has been at the front lines on some of the most divisive political issues of our time, and repeatedly has pursued a far-right conservative agenda that demonstrates hostility toward reproductive choice, individual rights, and disdain for a federal court system that serves as a guardian of those rights.

As a Mississippi state legislator, he called for a constitutional convention to propose an amendment banning abortion. As Chairman of the Human Rights and Responsibilities subcommittee of the Republican Platform Committee in 1976, he led the fight to have the Republican Party adopt a constitutional amendment to ban abortion in the party platform. That was a major step in providing anti-choice forces a powerful national vehicle through which to organize a roll back of this core right for American women. And while President of the Mississippi Baptist Convention, the organization adopted a resolution calling for legislation to ban abortion except to save the life of the woman.

One hallmark of our free society is the independence of the federal judiciary from politics. This independence allows the federal courts to protect constitutional rights free of political interference - especially important in the area of reproductive choice. Pickering showed little willingness to respect judicial independence - as a Senator, he was eager to amend the Constitution when he disagreed with decisions by the federal courts. In the Mississippi Senate, Pickering co-sponsored legislation calling for a constitutional amendment limiting the tenure of federal judges, and voted for a constitutional amendment to limit federal judges to six-year terms.

He also supported holding constitutional conventions to pass amendments to reverse desegregation and separation of church and state court decisions.

Clearly, he wishes to create a federal judiciary that responds to ultra-conservative political pressure, rather than one which independently interprets the laws and the constitution. Freed from the limitations of the district court, Pickering would be in a position to use a Fifth Circuit seat as a vehicle for his own judicial activism -- where his disdain for precedent and for plaintiffs with the temerity to assert their own civil rights would have broader ramifications. Pickering's career is marked by conservative political activism, not by thoughtful legal jurisprudence.

Because of the large caseload in the federal courts, circuit courts are increasingly for most people the courts of last resort. A die-hard conservative activist with strongly held views on critical constitutional issues, Pickering is exactly the wrong kind of person to serve on an appellate court so pivotal to the lives of so many women.

The Senate's proper role is to consider a nominee's views, and to reject those judges who would roll back the rights of women. The Constitution provides for this and the American people want their Senators to exercise advice as well as consent.

We are issuing a report today to help educate our members on the need to oppose this nomination. We also call on Senators to read our report to understand how critical this nomination is to the future of reproductive freedom and choice. And we trust once they do, they will understand how critical it is for them to reject this nomination.

LCCR Opposes Pickering Nomination to Fifth Circuit- Serious Concerns About Nominee's Civil Rights Record

Leadership Conference on Civil Rights
Thursday, January 24, 2002

Wade Henderson, Executive Director, Leadership Conference on Civil Rights (LCCR), issued the following statement today regarding President Bush's nomination of Judge Charles W. Pickering, Sr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit:

"Although I am honored to join my colleagues this morning in defending the integrity of the federal courts, I regret that today's action has been made necessary by the nomination of an individual to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals whose background, actions and temperament render him unsuitable for elevation to this most important court.

As we know, the federal courts often are called the guardians of the Constitution because their rulings protect the rights and liberties guaranteed by this most hallowed of documents. For many Americans, the federal judiciary is the first line of defense against violations of dearly held constitutional principles; for others, it is the last bastion of hope in a system that has marginalized, mistreated or simply ignored them.

The Leadership Conference strongly believes that the composition of the federal judiciary is a civil rights issue of profound importance to all Americans, because the individuals charged with dispensing justice in our society have a direct impact on civil rights protections for us all.

As such, the federal judiciary must be perceived by the public as an instrument of justice, and the individuals who are selected for this branch of government must be the embodiment of fairness and impartiality.

Our exhaustive and careful review of Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr.'s public record -- from law student to state legislator to judge, as well as the presentations we have heard today, have left us with little alternative but to oppose his nomination because of his extreme views on important civil rights, women's rights and constitutional issues.

When taken together, these immoderate positions ought to disqualify Judge Pickering from serious consideration for any federal Circuit, much less the important 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

It is especially important to note that we are discussing this nominee in the context of the Circuit to which he has been appointed. With Mississippi, Texas and Louisiana, the Fifth Circuit has the largest percentage of people of color of any Circuit Court in the country. Unquestionably, much is at stake when it comes to civil rights.

Historically, the Fifth Circuit was the Circuit of "Unlikely Heroes," who in the face of much opposition, issued scores of important opinions that in effect desegregated the South. This is the Circuit of:

John Minor Wisdom who ordered that James Meredith to be admitted to the University of Mississippi;

Richard Rives who outlawed segregation on the Montgomery city buses;

Elbert Tuttle who ordered the integration of the University of Georgia and struck down Louisiana's segregated pupil placement laws; and finally,

John Brown who, in U.S. v. Mississippi, wrote that "no nation can survive if it flagrantly denies its citizens the right to vote."

Today, the Fifth Circuit is dramatically different. It is now one of, if not the most hostile appellate courts in the country when it comes to civil rights. The Fifth Circuit is now the Hopwood Court that refused to apply Bakke to college admissions, impacting educational opportunities for black and brown students. The Fifth Circuit is now the Reeves Court that issued an opinion about the "intent" standard in employment discrimination cases so extreme it was overturned by the Supreme Court, 9-0. The Fifth circuit is the LULAC v. Clements court that held that the Voting rights Act does not apply to at-large judicial elections; again, an opinion so extreme, it was reversed by the U.S. Supreme court.

After our careful review of Judge Pickering's record -- on and off the bench -- we are forced to conclude that he is the wrong man for the Fifth Circuit. This Circuit requires a jurist who will have a moderating influence on the Court. We urge the Senate to consider all of these circumstances and to exercise its constitutional prerogative to reject this nominee cries out for moderation. And we implore President Bush to nominate a moderate for this critical position.

According to Senate records reviewed by The Associated Press, Pickering testified he "never had any contact with the Sovereignty Commission," Mississippi's now-defunct segregation watchdog agency. However, a 1972 letter in the commission's files said Pickering, while a state senator, had "requested to be advised" by the commission about a group organizing pulpwood workers.

Pickering said it would inappropriate for him to comment until his next hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

People for the American Way, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the Alliance for Justice and the National Abortion Rights Action League are among the groups planning to speak out against Pickering in Washington Thursday.

John Nowacki, deputy director for the conservative Free Congress Foundation's Center for Law and Democracy, said Pickering is a good choice.

"They're trying to find something to latch onto to oppose nominees and they think they can pull this off," he said. "With Pickering, they think that they have something to hang their hats on, but when you look at it and look at it closely, there's really nothing there."

Bush's Picks for Courts Under Attack

By Tom Brune

Newsday

Thursday, January 24, 2002

The fight over President George W. Bush's choices for federal judgeships, waged behind the scenes since the Sept. 11 attacks, will resurface today as liberal groups declare their first open war on a Bush judicial nomination.

The liberals' target is Charles Pickering, a conservative Mississippi federal judge nominated to fill a vacancy on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals who also is a friend and political ally of Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.). "This is likely to be the opening round in the judicial nomination battle," said Elliot Minberg of People for the American Way, one of the liberal groups that will hold a news conference today to urge the Senate to reject Pickering's nomination.

Pickering is just one of many of Bush's judicial nominees criticized as too conservative by People for the American Way and its allies; he became the first target because Lott is pushing hard for a hearing and confirmation vote, Minberg said.

Lott yesterday called for Pickering's confirmation by Presidents Day, Feb. 18. "He's eminently qualified, supported by a broad group of individuals in our state, including minorities and women and plaintiff's attorneys and defense attorneys, and Republicans and Democrats," Lott said.

Even though the nation's attention was riveted on the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and the government's frantic follow-up last fall, the ideological battle over Bush's judicial nominations quietly but heatedly continued in the background in the Senate.

Bush has proved to be particularly eager to put his stamp on the federal court, which has more than 100 vacancies, or about 12 percent of the total judgeships.

Yesterday, Bush announced 24 new judicial nominations, bringing his total to 90 during his first year in office. That is much faster than most of his recent predecessors.
